

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

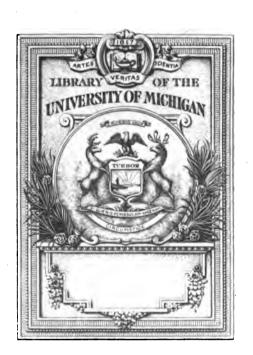

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

INTRODUCTION

CHRONICLES are the simplest form of History; and early General Pre-attempts at History have generally taken the form of Chro-marks on the origin and nicles. When we use the word History in the fullness of its Structure of meaning, we understand by it the study of human events in cles the complexity of their mutual relations and bearings on each A Chronicle (as the name implies) is only a narrative of events in the order of time—and we hardly call it History until these facts have undergone a new arrangement, having been re-examined, criticised, distributed and grouped.

Out of this difference between History and Chronicle there follows another. A History, when once cast into its form, is impatient of after modifications; the Chronicle admits alterations indefinitely. History is like a web of cloth; you cannot add to it or take from it without destroying its integrity. The Chronicle is like a set of tesseræ arranged on a recurring mathematical plan that can be continued ad infinitum in any direction, and can accommodate insertions in any part.

There are places in the Saxon Chronicles where the narrative exhibits a touch of genius and approaches to the dignity of history; nor is there anything in the chronicle-form which absolutely excludes the exercise of a higher talent, though it provides only an imperfect arena for it. But without any special gift a man might make a sufficient Chronicler, as his office was merely to write a statement of fact, or to copy an extract from an author and insert it under the right date. There was no need of observing proportion—a great event might be told briefly, and yet no reason why a minor event should not be told with local prolixity. Nothing more was required than that the records should be truly arranged in order of time.

With all this simplicity and elasticity and capacity of development, the Chronicle was particularly calculated to be the vehicle of history in early times, when literary facilities were scanty, and when the work of history had to be done in fraternities by a succession of very unequal hands. We do not look for shape or symmetry in any Chronicle, more especially in Chronicles which have grown without a plan, by the work of many hands labouring without concert. After a period of accumulation, the compiler enters, and then for the first time the whole collection is rendered subject to the law of one mind. But his operation turns chiefly on selection or rejection, and the new Chronicle shews where modern interests have ejected the more ancient.

For about four centuries the whole of our contemporary history (excepting Beda) is contained in vernacular Chronicles, and this literature survived a century after the fashion of it had been superseded by Latin chroniclers. The main features of the anonymous and many-handed Chronicle may be seen in a high state of preservation in the Saxon Chronicles. They represent various stages of literary progress, and they exhibit the taste and historical demands of many different generations. Towards their close we have historical composition of considerable maturity, but in their most primitive parts we have almost the rudest conceivable attempts at history. It is in this wide range of variety and diversity, and the illustration it affords of the early national progress, that the worth of the Saxon Chronicles (considered as a literary monument) must be discovered; and they must not be judged, as some writers have inconsiderately judged them, by the literary standards of the nineteenth century.

The diversity of language and of style which exists in these Chronicles is in some places so palpable that a short examination would enable the student to trace it, and mark off a series of distinct sections. But as the distinguishing features are not everywhere equally plain, and as the investigation is sometimes embarrassed by the circumstance that new compilers imparted something (however little) of their own to the old materials; and further, from the fact that the most primitive work is not to be found (where it might perhaps be looked for) at the earliest date, or even near it; it may be useful to set before the student a somewhat minute analysis, so as to enable him to resolve the composite work into its elementary parts, at least with some approach to verity. This dissecting process will fall chiefly upon two of the Chronicles, A and E, the two which are printed entire in this Edition. And that will be the case, not by an arbitrary selection, but by natural incidence. For these two are, in different senses, the most prominent, and challenge the largest amount of notice; the one because it is the highest source, the other because it presents the latest and largest development, and the most composite structure of the whole set.

But before we enter upon this analysis, it is desirable to Barliest form a right notion of the first rude uses of chronicling. what? Originally a Chronicle was not a device for arranging a store of events, and for reducing the accumulations of history to literary order. It was not (what it at length became) a method, a system of registration, whereby each event was put into its chronological place as soon as it reached the The chronicle-form had a more primitive use. was to characterise the receding series of years, each by a mark and sign of its own, so that the years might not be confused in the retrospect of those who had lived and acted in them. The same thing is done in our day when a man in middle age begins to experience that the hurry of life engenders confusion in the memory, and the bygone years grow less and less distinguishable. In such a case he probably creates for himself a little ten or twenty years' chronicle very brief, each entry only a single notice.

Such a Chronicle as this is not a depository of the accumulations of past events, but a chart of time for preserving chronological order among the stores of the memory. This is naturally the first kind of Chronicle which men require. Perhaps the following may represent the chronological outline as inscribed in some cotemporary memories:-

- 1807. Abolition of the Slave Trade.
- 1815. The year of the Peace.
- 1829. Catholic Emancipation.
- 1830. Death of George IV—Accession of William IV.
- 1832. The Reform Bill passed.
- 1837. The Accession of Queen Victoria.

- 1848. Year of Revolutions.
- 1851. The Great Exhibition.—Anticipations of Universal Peace.
- 1854. The English and French landed in the Crimea— The Battle of Alma.

The Definition of the Immaculate Conception.

- 1857. The Indian Mutiny.
- 1858. The grand Comet, and the drought so great that in some midland parts the green corn was cutto feed the cows.
- 1859. Magenta and Solferino. The last of the dry summers.
- 1860. The severe winter.
- 1861. April. Fort Sumter.
 December. The Prince Consort died.
- 1862. The International Exhibition.

In early times the particulars of past events were much more trusted to the memory than they are now; and only the chronological scaffolding was committed to parchment.

We are informed in Professor Wilson's Prehistoric Man that the Peruvians had a memoria technica, made of knots upon diversely-coloured strings. A Peruvian woman shewed a bundle of knotted strings, and said her whole life was there. Each knot was the index to a story, and all the stories were preserved in her memory.

Our own early Chronicles are something like this series of knots; for in their laconic annals much was implied and little expressed, and therefore they are a set of knots of which the solution died out with their authors. To posterity they present merely a name or two—as of a battle-field and a victor—but to the men of the day they suggested a thousand particulars, which they in their comrade-life were in the habit of recollecting and putting together. That which to us seems a lean and barren sentence, was to them the text for a winter evening's entertainment.

Their unfagged memory was richly stored with the events of their own day, and the legends of their ancestors. What one had forgotten another remembered, and where memory failed, imagination came to aid. So far were they from needing books as depositories of events, they were overwhelmed with the treasures of their own memory, and only needed some guarantee of order amidst the riches of which they Tradition and experience furnished them were in possession. with more facts than they had the capacity to accommodate. Where memory failed, fancy promptly entered, as into a forfeited domain. The wild and frolic fancy was ever ready, in the absence of any controlling system of order, to promote dislocation by an arbitrary reconstruction, to foment confusion and revel in it, and to conjure up out of the chaos new and grotesque combinations. Therefore they wanted—not History, but Chronology.

When men had felt the necessity of guarding themselves against mytho-poesy, they found their first guarantee for the security of historical truth in tables of chronology. long as past events were regarded only as material for an evening's entertainment, no one cared to preserve them from confusion and embellishment; but when a desire of certainty about the past began to be felt, and unadorned facts came to be valued, even above the more specious legend, then it is interesting to watch the steps by which they arrived at what they wanted. The Saxon Chronicles exhibit this process more than any (perhaps) in existence.

A numerical list of years was prepared, with a blank space, Mechanical generally only a single line, opposite each number. The Chronicles. smallness of the space shews that nothing great was designed, but only a year-mark to know and distinguish the year by. As many of these blanks were filled in as the compiler had matter ready for, and the rest were left open for supplementary insertions. Capgrave in the Dedication of his Chronicle of England (to be spoken of below) thus explains the utility of such blank spaces: If other studious men, that have more red than I, or can fynde that I fond not, or have elde bokes whech make more expression of thoo stories that fel fro the creacion of Adam onto the general Flod than I have, the velim lith bare, save the noumbir, redi to receive that thei wille set in. Many of them remained blank to the last, and in the older Chronicles they are seen as blank lines; but in the later the figures have been copied continuously, as if they formed part of the text. Out of this mechanical process of construction grew the fashion of beginning the annals with an adverb not of time but of place, HER, in this place, at this point of the series. The blanks which were left were not without their use; they served to give a quick and almost pictorial measure of the intervals between the entries.

A tabular system of this sort was appropriately designated by a word which we find in the Latin chroniclers, Chronographia*, a sketch or chart of time, a time-table. And this is but an amplification of the more general term Chronicon, a Chronicle, a Time-book, a book of years; דברי הימים. How long the historical mind continued to stand at this incipient stage, and by what steps it came to require history of a maturer sort, may in some measure be seen by the analysis of these Chronicles. And as they range through a space of many centuries, we must try to fix that point or epoch of time, at which they originated and from which they have grown in two directions, backward and forward. It will be a main object of our analysis to form some clear opinion on this point. Dr. Pauli has concurred in the opinion "that the Anglo-Saxon Chronicles were first commenced under Alfred." That the reign of Alfred is an important epoch in the history of these Annals, and that in some sense it was a starting-point, is plain from the great uniformity of all the several members of the series up to a date in Alfred's reign, as compared with their divergencies after that date. But the difficulties of imagining that such a collection of annals (meagre as it often is), covering a period of 437 years, could have been made in 892 if Chronicles had not been kept before, are insuperable. Had there been a series of authors like Bede, offering to the collector whatever he chose to select, it would be different. But even during the period for which Bede is available, we find Annals purely domestic, and derivable neither from Bede nor from any source that is known to us. I propose then to analyze the præ-Ælfredic Chronicle, not with the expectation of arriving at an incontestable natural dissection, but in the hope of exhibiting as well the heterogeneousness of the materials that enter into the compilation, as also the diversities and transitions of plan and purpose which mark it as a compilation made from earlier Chronicles.

A Saxon Chronicle containing Annals from B.C. 60 to A.D. 1070.

This is a manuscript in the library of Corpus Christi Col-the Winlege, Cambridge. (MS. C.C.C. CLXXIII.) That Society acchronicle quired it by the gift of Archbishop Parker. It is described by Wanley, p. 130, and by Mr. T. Duffus Hardy, vol. i. p. 651.

It has every title to rank first in the list of Saxon Chronicles.

Its original handwriting stops at 891, and the summary of Wessex Kings with which the book is prefaced ends with Alfred. These features indicate a Chronicle which was composed in Alfred's reign, or a copy of such a Chronicle.

Whether it is really a manuscript of the last decade of the ninth century I hesitate to judge.

The penmanship is almost too mature for so early a date. The style certainly exhibits archaisms fitting the reign of Alfred, but from the irregular way in which they are scattered up and down, they appear like exceptional instances in which the copier lapsed into the manner of his original. There are, however, a few ancient forms in the first handwriting which are so constant as to give this MS. an appearance of the highest originality. Such are a for ea, as in al, Walas; some archaic uses of the rare diphthong ie, as in hiera, Miercna; and the form cuom for com. These have been sometimes called Mercian, and have been supposed to indicate a Mercian nativity for the early parts of the Chronicle. But it should be remembered that the vernacular was first cultivated in Northumbria, and that the Wessex orthography must at first have been more or less borrowed from the north.

At the Reformation this book belonged to the monastery of Christ Church, Canterbury, as we learn from some notes of Joscelin's, preserved in a volume of the Cotton Library*. But its association with Canterbury is almost wholly of the external kind; the internal characteristics connect it rather with Winchester. It will appear from the analysis of the contents that this book or its original was a native of Winchester, and was compiled there in Alfred's reign. If not an original, we may suppose that when in process of time this Chronicle had become famous and venerable, a careful transcript of it was ordered for the Library of Christ Church, Canterbury.—(See below on § 11.)

and developed with it pari passu. It seems to have at one time stopped at Beorhtric, and then again at Æthelwulf, and lastly to have been brought down to Alfred's accession, at some time during his reign. It closes with the mention of his age at the time of his accession, and computes the years from the foundation of the dynasty to the same point. To Alfred's reign we must assign all the Annals down to 449, and many inserted Annals down to 731. The former were derived entirely from Latin authors, and chiefly from Bede. They are often a bold verbal translation of the Chronological Epitome appended to the Historia Ecclesiastica: e.g. Anno 47. Her Claudius oper Romana cy-

But the Annals between 449 and 731 are mixed; and here we have only to do with those which are borrowed from Bede. These are—449, 538, 544, 547 (to onwoc), 565, 601, 603, 604, 606, 616, 625, 626, 627, 633, 640, 642, 644, 650, 651, 653, 654, part of 655, 660, 664, 668, 670, parts of 673 and 675, the last clause in 676, 678, 679, 680, a line and half in 685, 688 (the genealogy excepted), half of 690, 704, 705, the last clause of 709, parts of 716, 725 (part), ninga Bretene lond gesohte, &c. is a verbal rendering of Bede's "Claudius secundus Romanorum Britannias adiens."

Of this whole section, only the preface is original; the rest is a work of collection, translation, and bookmaking. It belonged to the editorial task of throwing the book into shape, and giving it the required completeness as a Chronicle embracing the Christian era generally. It was probably done about the year 887. The reasons for this opinion will appear when we come to that date.

§ 2. The annals from 455 to 634 which have not been classed in the former section. This represents the gleanings and reconstruction of the half-lost early history of Wessex, at the time of the first compilation (855). Embodying antiquities of a high type, it is not the oldest composition preserved in this It is such history as could still be made out of oral traditions, and it probably represents the collected information of the bardic memory aided by the runic stones, and the roll of kings. Its character is betrayed by an artificial chronology, in which the numbers 8 and 4 are prevalent fac-We find for example the following series: 457, 465, 473, 477, 485. Again, 552, 556, 560, (565 belongs to the previous section) 568. Certain statements appear to be only fanciful, the offspring of rude etymological speculations. Among such may with probability be reckoned the names of Ælle's sons in 477, Cymen, and Wlencing, and Cissa, which correspond with a suspicious resemblance to three Sussex townships, Shoreham (see note on 477), Lancing, and Chichester. No doubt the first adventurers did often call places after their own names, and therefore it cannot be denied that the above may be historical.

But no critic will admit the personality of Port, who is said to have arrived in 501 in the place called (of course, after himself) Portsmouth. Clearly the existence of such a hero as Port was a presumption that arose out of a mistaken notion of the name Portsmouth, a name which embodies the Latin word portus, a harbour.

In 508, a local name, Neatanleah (now Netley), which probably meant a pasture for oxen, is ambitiously associated with one of the most famous of British dynastic names. (See the note on 508.)

That the hero Wihtgar (514, 534, 544) is a fiction, and his name merely an eponym for Wihtgaræsburh (530) or Wihtgaraburh (544), is beyond doubt; whether we suppose garæs- or gara- to be another form of -wara- (=inhabitants), as in Cantwaraburh; or whether we take this "gar" to be caer or car (the form usual in Cornwall), the British word for a castle or stronghold.

X § 2

No general assertion can be made concerning the historical quality of this section: each clause must be estimated and valued for itself. Some parts are pure dream-work, while others have a historical and trustworthy appearance. These prevail more and more towards the close of the period, as if indicating the existence of better documents, which it is natural to suppose would have been kept with more or less care from the reception of Christianity. And therefore the date 634 has been fixed on as the close of this Section, although there is no appearance of a division, the traditional being intermingled with the earliest traces of documentary annals.

Τ' § 8.

§ 3. The annals from 635 to 682, except those which are disposed of in § 1. This period, which covers a long generation of men, contains the first documentary annals of this Chronicle, and indeed of the whole series of Saxon Chronicles. In order to understand the nature of this Section, we must carefully exclude adventitious matter. The insertions from Bede have already been collected under § 1. Here and there may be seen an annal, expressed in riper language, which (though not found in the Chronological Epitome of Bede) must be marked as the interpolation of a later Editor. Such a one is 650. Further, we must eliminate occasional amplifications, also by a later Editor. Two such may be found on page 26, in the annals 643 and 648, which have both been continued by a later hand. The continuation is betrayed in both instances by the employment of the demonstrative SE in a peculiar manner. In 643, the original annal, the part which alone belongs strictly to this Section, ends at "wint." A later. Editor added: "And this Cenwalh bade build the church in Winchester." Similar continuations are found also in the previous Section, e.g. 597, 611. The probable author of these will be pointed out by and bye. When all these accretions are struck off, there remains a set of very simple and sober annals, quite free from the romancing air which discovers itself in the foregoing Section, and without any of that attempt at detail which learning afterwards demanded. These annals are mere land-marks of time, points fixed here and there to save memory from chaos, a Chronologia rather than a Chronicon.

The note appended to 643 about the foundation of Winchester Cathedral is a guiding one for us in this dissection. It gives the δμφαλός of which we are in search, the central and germinating point of the Chronicle. The Chronicle which was begun at Winchester in Cenwalh's churchtown, supplied the base of all after collections and accretions, and to this we trace back the course of English History.

We can hardly suppose that these annals are all strictly contemporary. Their irregularity forbids the notion. They were from time to time, perhaps not oftener than once in a generation, posted up to the current date. Consequently we may expect to find here and there some tokens of approach to the actual time of writing. Such an indication may perhaps be traced in the annal 682, which I have fixed on for the close of this Section. It is the first instance in which we find "On pissum geare—" instead of HER. This feature recurs 889; and the greater certainty of contemporary writing in that place may be reflected back on this.

§ 4. The next trace of an ancient cessation is at the word 'Cumbran' in the annal 755. Between 682 and 755 there were probably one or more intermediate terminations, and the marks of such may perhaps be discovered, with more or less distinctness. A likely spot is between 718 and 725, where the annals are strongly archaic, relate almost exclusively to Wessex, and are comparatively circumstantial. But at the date of 755 we find the conditions of a break more completely The entries of the Bishops of Winchester, which are given with great regularity from Birinus in 634 down to the accession of Cyneheard in 754, are henceforth omitted, and are never again entered except in the most fitful and accidental This seems to indicate a change of some significance. Hitherto their accession is recorded as regularly as that of the kings, and even (as in 676) taking precedence of the king: but now they are dropped altogether. It is clear that in the year 755 the State of Wessex fell into disorder, and that there was a political schism if not a civil war. The prolongation of the annal of 755 from "and se Cynewulf &c." has been appended by a later collector. This Section is almost purely composed of royal and ecclesiastical Fasti: not domestic merely, but also Kentish, Northumbrian, and Mercian.

755. § 5. The next break was probably at the close of 822. In the beginning of this Section (758 sqq.) we have mere chronography—an ineffectual attempt to fill out the tale of years with corresponding events. The annal 784 seems to shew that the prolongation of 755 had not yet got into the Chronicle.

The annal 800 though not very long is very circumstantial, and it relates the death of Beorhtric, of whom at the mention of his accession in 784 it is said, "and his ryht fædren cyn gæb to Cerdice;" being the last instance of this archaic formula. Of Beorhtric it is used in the prefatory list of Saxon Kings, and with him it ceases there, as well as here in the body of the Chronicle*. These marks seem to indicate a pause somewhere in the reign of Ecgbryht, and it is fixed at 822 because there the prevalent characteristic of this Section suddenly ceases. For this Section is highly ecclesiastical, not only by notices of English bishops and synods, but also it venerates Rome more than any section previous to the twelfth century. Nor may we suppose that this is due to later insertions; because the matter is suited to these times, because it would be hard to say to what other epoch it should be assigned, and because we can trace the same disposition on for a few years after 800, which we fix as the first cotemporary pause of this chronographer. The same hand may be recognized down to the close of 822, where there appears to be a sudden change in the character of the entries. No more about Popes and Synods; all is military and political.

To this hand I should attribute the insertion of that interesting observation on the death of Abp. Theodore in 690: Ær wærun Romanisce biscepas. siþþan wærun Englisce.

§ 6. At the year 855 the Termination of an ancient Chronicle is plainly seen, like the lines of some ancient sea-coast high up in the mainland. At the close of Æpelwulf's reign we find a grand genealogical demonstration, in a style that implies the utmost heraldic effort of which the times were capable. In the Preface also we find Æpelwulf distinguished by a pedigree attached to his name, running back to Cerdic. But in the Termination of 855 the line of Wessex progenitors

woden back into the mists of high mythology, whence the line of Scripture patriarchs is laid hold of, and so up to Adam, whose name is then spiritualized into Christ. Whether this represents merely the epilogue of that ancient royal Stemma, of which we have had instalments from time to time, or whether it was composed expressly for this place, it is observable that from this point forward we have no more of the old pedigrees which in the former part are so frequent. Either supposition lends itself readily to the probability that here we are nearing contemporary history again. For if it was merely a Stemma that was incorporated into the Chronicle, the termination with Æthelwulf seems to imply that he was at the time of its incorporation the king last deceased.

There is an appearance of recent interest about the reign The Capitals at his accession, and in the year of Æthelwulf. 851, strengthen the significance which we might be inclined to attach to the triumphal and solemn air of his Pedigree, At one time I thought this Section with its final AMEN. might with fair probability be brought home to Swidhun who was Bishop of Winchester when Æthelwulf died. something about the second paragraph of 853 and the whole of 855 that seems to prompt such an idea. The expression pa was domne Leo pap &c. would very naturally proceed from one who had accompanied Alfred to Rome. Leo died the same year as Æthelwulf. The first clause in 855 is probably there by error instead of under 851, as may be seen by a comparison of Asser. Putting that clause aside, the remainder of 855 is very germane to such a character as The devotion of one-tenth of his land to religious uses is told with pious satisfaction; and the troubles, domestic and civil, which were averted by Æthelwulf's return from the continent, with a discreet reticence not expressed but only glanced at in the phrase, and his people were fain of his But such an idea seems untenable, if only for the following reason. The continuation of 855 and the annal of 860 appears like a later appendix by the same hand, and as the duration of the reign of Ethelbryht is given under 860, this could not have been written earlier than 865—whereas Swidhun died in 862.

Any how, we have here an Editor whose work we can define and whose hand we can trace even through the mazes of this composite Chronicle. To him must be assigned, not the Chronicle as it now stands from the beginning, but from 455 (Hengist and Horsa) to 855, making the necessary exceptions for later insertions, chiefly those already indicated in § 1. The Chronicle of Swidhun then, (for so I may surely be permitted to call it, honoris causâ, as it is at least probable that it was first wound up during his episcopate and at his See,) consisted of the Sections § 2-§ 6. In this Edition the old genealogical Preface which had been closed with Beorhtric, was carried down to "Cerdicing" (p. 4). To this Editor must be assigned all those amplifications of annals, in which the connection is effected by a somewhat marked use of the Demonstrative SE with a Proper Name, a use which was not continued in the sequel of the language (as it was in Greek, & Σωκράτης &c.), but which seems to have had its crisis about Instances are 597, 611, 643, 648, 660, 670, 674 (without Proper Name), 685, 688, 694, 709 (without Proper Name), 728, 731, 755, 827, 836, 855, 860. The "se Epelbryht" of 860 is (I think) the last instance of this peculiar usage, which is rendered in F by "Ses ÆSelbyrht." repeated "se Carl se Carl" of 885 is a different thing. Here there is a contra-distinction, like that expressed by the Greek δ μέν . . . δ δέ.

Another little trait may be noticed as marking this Editor. He has here and there put a Latin title, dux, 837 and 851, domne Leo pāp, 853; which is a thing that merits notice only because of its extreme rarity in these times. On this account we may almost venture to fix on the annal 792 as an insertion by this Editor, on account of its "Æpelbryhte rex," in which it is not followed by any of the more recent editions BCDEF. The prefix domne to the Pope's name had more favour, it is kept by BC. In G it is Saxonised thus, "pa wæs Sonne Leo papa on Rome."

Another interesting feature in this Section is the mention (for the first time) of the present day, and the appearance of the grammatical First Person; "and these made the greatest carnage on heathen marauders that we have heard tell of up to the present day" (851). This expression might be used in a contemporary annal, but I am inclined to think it a later insertion; and partly because BCDE have a different order of the paragraphs here.

§ 7. The next division is marked by the change of handwriting in 891. Whatever uncertainty may beset the previous analysis, there is no doubt that here we have a natural Section. It covers a period of 27 years, and every year has its annal; a circumstance which (occurring here for the first time) is in itself a ground of distinction. Some of the annals are full and circumstantial, chiefly 867, 871, 878, and 885; others are so in a less degree: while those which are brief, as 869, 872, 873, 879, 880, 886, contain well-selected matter, even where the scene is altogether beyond seas, as in 881, 883, 884. But these characters change very remarkably at the close of 887. Here we have a singular transition to trivial notices; and one annal, that of 889, consists of a twofold observation, half negative and half positive; one if not both of which would soon have perished from memory, had it not been quickly committed to writing. What makes it more remarkable, these small matters which from their very insignificance indicate a contemporary pen, are ecclesiastical, whereas the general character of the Section is by no means so. Moreover, it is to be observed that the annal 889 opens, not with the customary HER, but with On bissum geare; a feature which has already been noticed in § 3, where the use I made of it might seem questionable, but for this confirmatory example. Here then it appears to me that we are actually on cotemporary ground, and I differ from Mr. Wright (Biographia Lit.—Asser), who thinks that this part of the Chronicle "was most probably not in existence till long after Alfred's death." A contrary view of the case would have dispelled one of his perplexities, and he would have been at no loss to account for the discontinuance of the contribution from the Saxon Chronicle at the year 887, in a work which purports to be composed in 893. No doubt there were copies made of a Chronicle which ended with 887, and one of these was in the hands of the composer of the Asserian Biography. last clause of 887 and thence to the close of the first hand at "gefor" in 891, is largely the work of a man of peace, whereas the Section as a whole sounds of war. Rare inser₩ § 7.

tions in keeping with this appendix appear at 874, 878, 885. In this Section we have some of the most archaic Saxon in the whole Chronicle, and this may appear strange to those who are not familiar with the intricacies of its structure. annal of 876 is one of the best preserved and least altered pieces of pristine Englisc, and its antiquated style has baffled the interpreters. Except the story under 7.55 there is hardly anything to match it. And this is only a strong instance of what is felt at many parts of this Section; it is very stiff and primitive. The obvious inference is, that the older parts have undergone a process of modernisation, to which this has not been subjected. But there are certain archaic forms which are found both in this and the previous Sections, which we here take leave of. After this Section we have no more cuom, cuomon, but com, comon: no more hiera, but hiora and hira; no more instances of wærun or other plural præterites in -un. It appears doubtful what is the exact position of the remainder of 801 (after the change of handwriting) down to the close of 893. It does not claim to belong to the next Section, and it is contained in manuscripts (E F) which omit the next Section. The expression at the opening of 893, "se micla here be we gefyrn ymbe spræcon," i.e. the great host which we before spoke about, seems to claim for this isolated portion identity of authorship with the annals immediately preceding, and therefore we will consider it as an Appendix of this Section.

$ 8. Here we have the hand of one who is something more than an ordinary Continuator, in the author who furnishes the six and half pages which follow. This is the most remarkable piece of writing in the whole series of Chronicles. It is a warm, vigorous, earnest narrative, free from the rigidity of the other annals, full of life and originality. Compared with this passage, every other piece of prose, not in these Chronicles merely, but throughout the whole range of extant Saxon literature, must assume a secondary rank. There is some fine diction in C and D, there is fluent and rhetorical language in Ælfric, but the present passage is to these what Thucydides is to Xenophon.

Here the reader may feel the personal presence of the narrator more sensibly than anywhere else. It is not merely that he speaks in the first person (swa ic ær sæde, p. 92); this we may find elsewhere, as in E 1086, which is also a passage of much freshness. But this piece of T is so full of native force, that its life seems always fresh in it, and it reads more like a narrative of our own times than of Alfred's.

The writer closes his annual periods with a colophon like Thucydides, who sums up as each έτος τῷ πολέμφ ἐτελεύτα τῷδε δυ Θουκυδίδης ξυυέγραψευ. So this writer:

- § and best was ymb twelf monad bes be hie ar hider ofer sæ comon.
 - § þæt wæs ymb twa ger þæs þe hie hider ofer sæ comon.
- § þæt wæs ymb þreo ger þæs þe hie on Limene muðan comon hider ofer sæ.

As to the date of this Continuation it is almost superfluous to enter into detail, when once the vigour and earnestness of the narrative are appreciated. Dr. Pauli in his Life of Alfred esays, that this was written "in the following century." As the end of the century was so near, this may be literally true; it may have been written as late as the spring of 901. should however prefer to believe that it was composed in the winter following the campaign of 897, and there is a style about the paragraph at the foot of page 94 which invites such a conjecture. It flags after 897, and I doubt not it was on parchment before Alfred's death in 901. That the Section belongs to that group of Anglo-Saxon literature with which the name of Alfred has been justly associated, is manifest in every part of it, as might be illustrated by several particulars. E. g. the unusual expression which puzzled Wheloc, "buton swipe gewaldenum dæle" (p. 91)=" except a very considerable division." This we meet with again in Orosius iv. 9, "mid gewealdenan fultume"—and I have not noticed it elsewhere. (Adverbially gewealden occurs in the fragment of Zosimas, p. 110. l. 20. Appendix to my Swidhun.)

But while the annals 894-897 form a complete episode in themselves, I cannot distinguish them in anything except their fullness and exuberance and warmth, from the annals which follow down to 924 fin. These two parts appear like the work of one mind in different moods. The piece 894-897 exhibits greater intensity of feeling, and so far keeps true to the drama of history. That the latter items of 897, and especially the paragraph about the death of the king's horsethane, as also (though less manifestly) the annal of 898, are contemporaneous entries—desultory and incidental jottings in a dormant interval of the Chronicle-seems, under all the circumstances, presumably certain. The death of Alfred and the sedition of Ædelwold do not appear to have been inserted till after the latter had run its course in 905, or rather perhaps until five years later, 910. The two sections of Ædelwold's escapade, under 901 and 910, have not the force of the piece at the head of the Section, but they be peak the same hand. The ten years 901-910 are however but scantily furnished, and in a chronographic manner. The notices of ecclesiastics may partly be due to personal distinction, as in the cases of Grimbald and Asser; but as they are isolated and exceptional, forming part of no sequence (the line of Winchester bishops, for example, having been neglected since 754), we must regard them partly as an eking out of the chronography. From the middle of 910 to the close of 924 we have a steady, regular, well-written narrative, homogeneous and unmixed in matter, like the head-piece of this Section, and unlike all the rest of the Chronicle. It is all sieges and battles, and fortifications and garrisons, and surrenders and armed pacifications. Not a word of home affairs whether of Church or State. It is a model of uniformity both in matter and manner.

One might be prompted to find a break at 920 where A first parts company with BCD, after they have gone thus far together from the beginning. But this indication, standing alone, is no evidence of a break in the continuity of A,—it concerns only the literary history of BCD. As in the last Section, so in this, the Termination coincides with a change in the handwriting; and it may not be amiss to record the fact, that this transition of penmanship has only made our division to be put at the close of 924 instead of 925, at which, from internal evidence (before I noticed the change of hand), I had long ago placed it.

759. § 9. The annals 925-975. This Section is so conspicuously contrasted with the preceding, so clearly defined at its close, and so strongly characterized in every respect, that I speak with less diffidence in pronouncing it a natural division. In the first place it is wonderfully meagre, a charge which is often unreasonably alleged against these Chronicles in the most undiscriminating manner, but which may be justified here by a comparison with the historical literature of two earlier generations. When a critic opens the Saxon Chronicle, in the seventh century, and cries "How meagre!"—we wonder what standard of comparison he is thinking of, and we should like to be informed where he has found a nobler vernacular work produced by any nation at a like stage of its history! But here we are in the Tenth Century, and we have behind us a period of 59 years, during which scarcely a year but has been chronicled. The earlier chronography or year-markingcalendar has gradually expanded, and a genial interest in detail has been unfolding itself—when by a transition from hot to cold we suddenly find ourselves again in a bare chronography such as we took leave of as far back as 822, the last year of § 5.

In the next place it is devoid of all uniformity—there is no appearance of a plan. What served instead of a plan, was a taste for collecting and preserving the national songs. Section is as irregular as the last was uniform. The first twelve years are disposed of in less than as many lines; the first six having only one entry, viz. the demise of the crown. Here we find bishops again, the long-neglected succession of bishops—a mere expedient to fill out the vacant years. This poverty is however disguised, and not inadequately redeemed by the insertion of those poetical pieces which constitute the singular merit and ornament of this Section. There are four pieces: The Battle of Brunanburh, 937; the Annexation of Mercia, 942; The Coronation of Edgar at Bath, 973; The Death of Edgar with attendant circumstances, 975. There is a very observable difference between the first three of these pieces and the last of them. The first three are concerned each with a single and momentary event; the last is a narrative poem and covers a considerable space of time. To say the least, it enters upon a second year. The first three have the semblance of popular songs which the collector of 975 merely enshrined in the Chronicle; but the closing poem of the Section appears to have been composed for the place in which we find it. It would seem to be the work of the collector himself, who had a taste for poetry and was himself a poet and an admirer of poets. The matters contained in the poem of 975 are not heroic or otherwise proper to poetry (as those in 937, 942 and 973 are), they are simply historical and would make excellent prose. Nothing but that love for versification which at a later date produced a special form of rhyming literature, can account for the poetic dress of this annal. But this singularity on the one hand corresponds strikingly with the composition of this Section on the other—a Section whose chief merit lies in the old songs it has provided a setting for. It appears to me we can get at one little particular in the biography of this Collector and Poet. He was a friend and admirer of Cyneweard, whom he has contrived in the course of his brief centribution to mention twice; once in prose 964, as Abbot of Middelton, and once in verse 975, as Bishop. We cannot say that Cyneweard's name would have literally perished but for these two notices, because his name was enrolled among the Bishops of Wells, and there is a Charter extant with his signature (Cod. Dipl. 589). But name and office are hardly enough to quicken the memory of a man; and this Collector it is who has given Bishop Cyneweard a niche in history. Not the public importance of the man, but the personal affection of the chronicler, dictated the language of this commemoration:

And him tir fæst hæled tyn nihtum ær bisceop se goda purh gecyndne cræft dam wæs Cyneweard nama.

And forth away the far-famed hero, ten nights before [Edgar's death] from Britain had departed, the bishop who was good by inherited craft; whose name was Cyneweard.

The expression "from Britain departed" has been interpreted to signify his death. If this is the meaning, it is a great solecism, and must be supposed to convey the great loss his native land had sustained. But the phrase which tells us most about Cyneweard is "se goda burh gecyndne cræft," the meaning of which has (I suspect) been overlooked. Cræft is scientia; thus the astronomers are called in this same piece cræft gleawe men, scientiæ periti homines; and Cyneweard is said to have been "good by inherited craft," bonus per patriam indolem, artem, scientiam; πατρφάν τέχνην (Soph.

El. 1500). And what craft is it likely to have been that endeared Cyneweard to our Collector-what but the minstrel's craft? I venture to suggest that Cyneweard Bishop of Wells was the Poet Laureate of his day, and that he is really the author of the three pieces in this Section, which are so nobly and truly poetic, and so unlike the rhythmic labours at its close. But can we make out anything more about this Cyneweard? If the above exposition is admitted, Cyneweard was a poet, and the son of a poet. Now we have in Anglo-Saxon Literature a poet of a kindred name, of whom we would gladly know more than we do. The poet of the "Elene" has conveyed his name to posterity in Runes, which he has woven into his poem, and hence we know that his name was Cynewulf. Grimm seeks to connect this Cynewulf with Aldhelm, early in the eighth century. To dissent from an opinion of Jacob Grimm is like disputing parental authority—but in regard to the date of the "Elene" I cannot follow him. To my eyes it is palpably a work of the tenth century, and I know that I am not swayed to this view by the present exigency, because I find observations to this effect which I had long ago forgotten, and which were made when I had no theory to serve in the matter. Indeed the diction of the "Elene" is so like that of these three minor poems, that it must be pronounced certainly to belong to the same period. I venture then to imagine that Cyneweard the Bishop of Wells may have been a son of Cynewulf the poet of the "Elene." It is well known that in Anglo-Saxon families the first part of the name was held in common by many members of the family, while the second was changed. Thus four of the sons of Æðelwulf had names beginning with Æðel—viz. Æðelstan, Ædelwald, Ædelbriht, and Ædelred. At another time we find the word Ead continued from generation to generation in the the Royal Family: Ead weard, Ead mund, Ead red, Ead wig, Eadgar, Eadweard. And now as to the 'departure' of Cyneweard, which is expressed in these well-marked words, "him of Brytene gewat"—it seems to be suited to a setting forth to go to a foreign land, and unsuited to signify death. It appears to be the just opposite of that on p. 115:

ofer brad brimu Brytene sohtan over the broad sea, came to Britain.

As far as this text is concerned, we should not be authorised to fix the death of Cyneweard in 975, but rather his quitting the country whether into exile or otherwise. His successor Sigar dates from 975, which would not prove the death of his predecessor, but would provide a sufficient account for Cyneweard's death being entered in the Chronicles under 975; which entry would cause an unguarded interpretation of this poetical notice about his departure. In the tenth century the natural country for an exiled ecclesiastic to retire to was Italy; and it is from Italy that we have obtained the only known original of the "Elene," as well as the other poems of the Codex Vercellensis. These fragments of our tenth century literature, which the desolations of the eleventh century caused to perish at home, come back to us (like the Paris Psalter) from the lands to which they were carried by exiled Englishmen. May not Cyneweard have carried into Italy the poems of Cynewulf *?

§ 10. The annals 978-1001. At the close of 1001 the handwriting again changes, and it is up to that point that a later MS. (G) is copied from this. Also the matter changes; so that we have no doubt of a natural Section here. But it is hardly worthy of the name of a Section at all; it shows the neglect of an age when the vernacular literature could not keep its ground against the now much-cultivated Latin. There is this point of interest about it, that the whole Section is peculiar to A (G). The only annal which merits particular notice is the last, that of 1001. This annal has all the appearance of contemporaneous writing, and most of the others were perhaps a mere chronography to connect this with the Chronicle. Also, this annal, and indeed the whole Section, bears the local impress of Winchester, thus offering a contrast to the subsequent entries.

A § 11.

§ 11. The annals 1005-1070. Eleven scattered entries covering a period of 69 years, and consisting of matters interesting at Christ Church, Canterbury. The succession of the Archbishops of Canterbury, and the accession of one or two kings, among whom Cnut the benefactor of Christ Church. His gift of the harbour of Sandwich is commemorated in 1031, a mutilated annal. The annal of most importance is that of 1070, the year of Lanfranc's arrival in England. This annal is the earliest record of the dispute for precedence between the Sees of Canterbury and York. It is significant, that this Chronicle should cease its vernacular entries at the arrival of Lanfranc, that distinguished patron of literature. phenomenon as that of a Saxon Chronicle stopping at such an epoch, may have been among the causes which led to the belief that William the Conqueror had entertained the design of extinguishing the native language. If, however, we examine the evidence of this Chronicle more closely, we shall be rather disposed to conclude that Lanfranc may have been the instrument of bringing this Chronicle to Canterbury, and lodging it in the place which kept it till the days of the Reformation. For the whole of this Section agrees in diction with its last entry-was therefore all written at Canterbury and after Lanfranc's accession; but the latest previous entry (1001) is conspicuously localised at Winchester—the MS. was then probably fetched from Winchester about Lanfranc's coming when the monks of Christ Church were collecting books, for their own Library had been consumed in the recent fire. It was then brought down (in a way) to 1070 in Canterbury matters and in Canterbury Saxon, and it was never taken in hand again until the influence of the continental professor had made the learned society of Christ Church look down on their mother This took place about five years after Lanfranc's death, and then a summary was appended in Latin, which carried the history down to the consecration of Anselm*.

This Latin continuation represents the transition, which (after long vacillation) was at length effected from vernacular Saxon to Latin as the language of English history. However, the latest work done on this manuscript has yet to be noticed, and it is in Saxon. This is by an interpolator and reviser of the twelfth century, whose entries are in this Edition printed in small italics. I have sometimes indicated him by the sign a, as on p. 18 n. Many of his entries are on erasures which he has made of ancient matter uninteresting to himself and therefore condemned—such are especially the old pagan pedigrees. Then in his insertions, he discovers himself to have a local affection for Kent (e.g. 784), and this, with the likeness of penmanship, makes strongly for his identity with the compiler of F.

The next three manuscripts have so much in common that they may be considered as forming a group

B, C, D.

The great features which these have in common are as follows:—1. Their relationship to A is very similar though not identical, that is, they are rather cousins to each other than sisters. 2. They all belong to a central period, the period when the Saxon Literature culminated, and 3. they are central in the sense that they are free from provincialisms of language, and 4. their local characteristics are frequently, though not always, in common—e.g. the chronicle of Mercia, 902-921. 5. These three, and no others after A, possess the great passage 804-001; and indeed this agreement stretches further (while E F are almost silent) to the end of 918.

With these great features in common, they have also their several characteristics, which shall next be considered.

В

A Saxon Chronicle from the Incarnation to A.D. 977.

The Chronicle of Saint

This is one of the Cotton Manuscripts in the British Museum Augustine's, (MS. Cott. Tiber. A. vi. ff. 1-34). It is described by Wanley, p. 224; and by Mr. T. Duffus Hardy, vol. i. p. 655.

> This Manuscript had originally a genealogical Frontispice like that of A; but carried down to Edward the son of Edgar, who was the reigning monarch at the final date of this book. This piece is now wanting to the MS., and our knowledge of it is derived from notes in the handwriting of Joscelin, and from a transcript in the Bodleian, made in the 16th or 17th century, before B had lost its 'Genealogia.' Joscelin's note is preserved in a volume of the Cotton Library (Vitellius D. vii.), entitled Joh. Joscelini Collectanea. This is a volume of disjointed papers, and on No. 138 Joscelin has copied the genealogical Preface, and at its conclusion he notes:

Hic desinit historia Saxonica ... [burnt] ... Chr'i Cant: quam habet Doct. Wutton. Tradit jam historia Saxon Cant: quam habet Joan' Twyne, Cant. ælfred heold o'gran læs &e 30 wintra. &a feng eadweard to ælfred &a he for ferd &a feng ædelstan to his &a feng eadmond &er to 3 heold 9 gear 3 6 wucan. &a feng eadwig eadmundes sunu to rice. 3 heold 3 gear 3 36 wucena buton 2 dagum. &a he for ferd &a feng eadgar to his brodor 3 heold 16 gear 3 8 wucan 3 2 niht he for ferd &a feng eadweard to eadgares sunu 3 heold Hic d[esinit] historia Saxonica monasterii Augustini Cant.

We know from other notes by the same scholar, that his Historia Saxonica Monasterii Augustini Cant. is our MS. B: and therefore we have Joscelin's evidence as well as that of the Bodleian Transcript, to prove that B had a genealogical frontispice which terminated in the same reign as the annalistic portion.

There is a single leaf in a volume of the Cottonian Library (Tiber. A. iii. f. 175.) which has been identified both by Wanley (p. 199) and Hardy (p. 576) with the missing frontispice of B. It contains a genealogy almost entirely corresponding with what we have of Joscelin's copy from B, even to the circumstance of breaking off abruptly at and heold—. The variations are these: Tiber. A. iii. has eadmund (eadmond, Joscelin) and, ba feng eadwig to eadmundes sunu cinges (8a feng eadwig eadmundes sunu to rice, Joscelin). Insignificant as these variations are, they are perhaps enough to make us doubt the identity of the said leaf with that which has disappeared from B. If it is not the identical leaf, the coincidence of its fitting our MS. is all the more curious. Dr. Pauli (Life of Alfred) thinks it has come from some lost MS. If so, that MS. must have been nearly related to our B, for it is plain their historical area was coincident, and the penmanship is so like that of B, that it requires close scrutiny to distinguish the one from the other. Upon careful examination it does however appear that the writing of this odd leaf is firmer and more vigorous than that of B, and therefore I am inclined to agree with Dr. Pauli that it is a fragment from a MS. unknown to us, but probably one made at the same time and even the same place. A Facsimile of this leaf is given in Mr. Thorpe's Edition of the Chronicles.

The date indicated by the close of this Preface corresponds perfectly with the date of 977 at which the annals terminate: and everything tends to render it probable that this was the true date of this Compilation. As a slight confirmation may be noticed the insertion of a single word in the annal for 643. It is in B that "the church at Winchester" is first altered to "the old church at Winchester"—and this emendation would naturally occur to a copier in 977, when Bishop Ædelwold's new church was in building. But it does not appear probable that B itself is the identical Chronicle that was made in 977. It is in the same hand throughout, which though not conclusive against its originality, is injurious to such a pretension. For the autograph itself would have been usually written by a scribe down to the close of the Chronicle which served as a copy, and after that the Annalist would commence his work in his own handwriting. And the appearance of B suggests the idea that it is in fact a scribe's copy of this kind prepared for a stock to graft further annals upon, which intention was never carried out. It is a nice question for the Saxon expert to decide, what is the true date of our manuscript B. Duffus Hardy has in fact decided the question differently in two places of his Catalogue. When speaking of the odd leaf he has attributed it to the eleventh century, and when speaking of the Chronicle itself he has assigned it to the twelfth. Yet he holds that these two are only parts of one whole. Verum operi longo fas est obrepere somnum. There is an oversight here, and I take Mr. Hardy to mean the eleventh century in both cases. First, for the penmanship is decidedly bolder and rounder than that of our known examples of the twelfth century, such as E, F; and "a" the interpolator of A. These are specimens of twelfth century handwriting. and they already betray a tendency to that pinched angular and cursive hand which after the twelfth century changed the aspect of MSS. Secondly, the language in so far as it has a distinct character, claims kindred with A § 11, of which the date is plainly 1070 or thereabout. In both there is a great proneness to the termination in -an, instead of -on (plural of verbs) and instead of -um (dative).

is a variation from which hardly any Anglo-Saxon writing is free, but it is found in B in such uncommon abundance as to constitute a feature of the text: e.g. gefuhtan 881, wurden, weren, eoden 882, namen 886, forhergoden 887 &c., gecyrdan 867, where all the others have -on, and was cuman (instead of the participal termination -en) p. 1781., is more marked.

This manuscript is one of the least valuable of the extant Few peculiarities in B. Chronicles. It has fewer special characteristics than any one of the others, and contains very little historical matter which is peculiar to itself. Consequently, there is no one of the set which could be spared with less detriment to Saxon literature. Even those which stand much lower in the scale of excellence, such as F and G, are more historically important, because they have peculiarities to recommend them.

Rarely, it offers a variation which is interesting; there is one such at 700, where A C D E F all say that Aldhelm was bishop on the western side of the wood (se was be westen wuda biscop)—B has 'Selwood,' (be westan Selewuda,) to the west of Selwood. A peculiarity in 7.55, utan ymbeodan, where the others have the simple be-, is not without its use in illustrating the prefix be-. Where A (p. 95 m) with C and D have "sume hasfdon LX ara" B has the weak form of the genitive plural, arena. But most of its peculiarities are of a feeble and indistinct kind. Bryten-walda 827, where C D E have -wealda, may be called a faint archaism. A singularly strange form occurs at 891, betuh—which B has with C; where betuech A, betuech D G, betwix E, betwyx F.

B has a marked affinity for the next Chronicle C; beyond that of a common relationship to A. They have modifications of A, and additions to A, and one peculiarity of arrangement in common with each other, and in contradistinction from the later D E. For example: Anno 643 B C agree in the addition ealdan which is not in A, and most likely was not in D (now mutilated in this part), as far as we may judge of the hiatus from its imitator E. Under 855, in the close of the genealogy, B and C have Hadra Hwalaing. Hwala Bedwiging. Bedwig Sceafing. id est filius Nos, where D reads Hapra. Hwala Beowung. Beowi Sceafing. id est filius Noe; thus exhibiting B and C united in a strong divergence (we should have said a corruption—but Kemble accepted the form Bedwig) from D, where all three are yet more widely at variance with A. A decisive instance of the agreement of B and C against D and E occurs under 877 -where B and C coincide in an omission that mutilates the grammar, while D and E present complete transcripts of A, thus demonstrating that they derived through a channel independent of B C. The words omitted are, "and ba mette hie mycel ust on sæ." A second time in the same annal, B and C have an omission in common, as compared with A, where D and E give the full text of A. The words are, "ær hie on bam fæstene wæron bær him mon to ne mihte." Again, the Mercian Chronicle of Æthelflæd, which is printed in the Appendix (p. 269) has been embodied by B, C, D. But in B and C it figures as an indigesta moles after the year 915, whereas in D it is chronologized and distributed among the other materials.

From the above considerations I regard B as an eleventh century copy (made probably at St. Augustine's) of a Chronicle which was compiled about 977, upon the basis (not indeed of A itself but) of one of that family of transcripts of which A is the extant representative. All the evidence favours the supposition that its existence is due to some local stimulus which was imparted to literary pursuits in the first half of the eleventh century; and of which G (A) is another relic.

A Saxon Chronicle from the Invasion of Julius Casar to A.D. 1066.

The Abingdon Chronicle. This is one of the Cotton manuscripts in the British Museum; Cott. Tiberius, B. i. It is described by Wanley, p. 219; by Hardy, p. 656. The first handwriting stops at 1046. It is preceded by two poetical compositions, with which it is written consecutively, and which look as if they had been meant to stand as a sort of prelude to the Chronicle. The one is a description of the months and marked days of the year, a sort of versified Calendar; the second is a string of proverbs. Joscelin has set his Title Chronicle of Abingdon at the head of both of these pieces. Their intimate association with the Chronicle seems to call for their insertion here; and they illustrate the condition of some branches of knowledge and culture which are cognate to the study of history. The first poem may be considered as the text to a Runic Club-Almanack. The native month-names are preserved in it, while the Roman are put forward more prominently: and under the Christian modifications we may perhaps discern some traces of the old heathen Calendar. Thus in the month of February, after fixing the 7th as the day on which winter ends and spring begins, it seems the ancient Year-Rime went on to tell how the warrior then began to bestir himself, "and se wigend pa..." The sentence thus begun is diverted from its original course, and the warrior melts away into S. Matthias, whose Festival is seventeen days later.

^{*} gewunian (Hickes) weakens the sense, and destroys the alliteration.

The Abingdon nativity of C rests mainly on the note of Joscelin, but it may be corroborated, though not abundantly yet in some measure, by internal evidence. Both C and D (as compared with the previous Chronicles) tend to enlarge our view on the north of the Thames towards the west, in the line from Abingdon to Hereford. These two are evidently works of nearly the same date; they are one in language, style, and general complexion.

Their general similarity gives special value to the contrasts discoverable between them: an interesting illustration of their substantial agreement with verbal differences is to be seen under 1040. Some of the independent entries of C countenance its Abingdon origin. For instance, D is silent where C relates in 1044, the promotion of Siward Abbot of Abingdon to be Archbishop of Canterbury, and the election of churchwarden Edelstan to fill the vacant Abbacy:-1047, the death of Abbot Ečelstan:—1048 Siward's return from Canterbury to Abingdon. When we find such entries as these, not appearing in the intimately related D, occurring in C just before and after the date (1046) at which the first handwriting stops, we can hardly hesitate to conclude that the book was written at Abingdon in the midst of these events. To the same effect is the evidence of the language, which is of the most ripe and polished kind, marking the culmination of Saxon Literature.

Towards the close of the first hand, we find a series of terse and spirited annals, offering some of the finest extant samples of the highly developed Saxon of the eleventh century. The annal of 1040 may be cited as a fine piece of history in small. It is full of fact and full of feeling—brief and clear—and leaves no doubt as to the sentiments and judgments of the writer. No one could have written that annal who had not a vivid remembrance of the occurrences. The like may be said of others on p. 166 sqq.

There are some vigorous annals in the Continuation between 1046 and 1056, after which the narrative is suspended until 1065. The death of Edward the Confessor is then narrated with extraordinary solemnity, and the accession of Harold is noticed in terms which imply that the catastrophe of his reign was already known. Yet his story is pursued only so far as success attended him. Halfway through the drama of 1066 our anonymous author conducts us, to the point where he leaves Harold victorious at Stamford Bridge. historian seems to have enjoyed some peculiar opportunity of information concerning the two great northern fights of Wednesday, Sept. 20, 1066, and the following Sunday; -possibly some Northumbrian was visiting Abingdon in his travels, and repaying their hospitality by a contribution to their historical collection.

A Northum-brian para-graph at the in his own hand and added the incident which closes the book. The dialect of this paragraph is not well defined, but the more salient and constant features appear to be northern. That old and strong Northumbrian feature of CT where the Anglo-Saxon spelling is HT, and which is so familiar to the readers of Beda's Church History, who never writes Beorht or Berht but Berct, e.g. Bercta, Berctfrid, Berctgils, Berctham, Berctred, Ædilberct, Cudberct, Erconberct, &c., as also Drycthelm, Wictgils, Wictred, Wictuarii, and many more such,—this feature is found twice in the strange addition to C, without a single case of HT. There is micte for mitte, and nactes for nahtes. The (so early) examples of CH as gerechen, chinge, michel; the forms seite, purustang, and, not least, the Norsk word brunie, seem all to indicate a northern penman.

> There are a few marginal annotations in C, in a handwriting of the sixteenth century, chiefly in the way of identi-They are the work of a hand whom it would fying localities. be interesting to discover. The first of the series occurs at 457, and the note on that annal will indicate where the others are to be found.

In 976 there is an isolated little annal, of a great famine, unnoticed in any other Saxon Chronicle: but not overlooked Another annal peculiar to C is that dated 1039 by Florence. (p. 166 of this Edition), where the Welsh part of the entry seems to answer to what we read in Annales Cambria under the same date.

The relations between C and D are sometimes so intimate, as almost to suggest that the one may have been actually on the table at which the other was written. Such a solecism as that in 992, where three verbs stand in unbroken series, would not survive many transcriptions. Both C and D have "sceoldon cunnian meahton hi" = should try whether they could &c.—but E (who gives the passage almost word for word with C and D) varies at this place and writes "gif hi muhton."

There is no apparent reason for assigning to C a priority over D—except the undecisive circumstance, that it closes thirteen years earlier. The body of C and D is identical, being the Chronicle which is represented in the Latin Annals of Florence of Worcester. At the same time, together with this central agreement, there is a divergence in the accretions of each. C embodies extracts from A and B, which do not appear in D. On the other hand the latter amplified his history by the incorporation of northern affairs, and became the parent of a strain of Chronicles of which E represents the fullest development.

While therefore it is doubtful whether the serial position of Conclusion C between B and D is chronologically true, it is convenient as origin of C an expression of the relation which C bears to B on the one hand and to D on the other. I suppose then that in or about the year 1045, the community at Abingdon borrowed books from Canterbury (B) and from Worcester (D) and composed from them the present Chronicle: making use of the briefer Canterbury records for the earlier period. That this part was copied from a Canterbury book like B, is suggested by an omission of an essential clause in 877 init. which C imitates, but which is not followed by D. Another argument for the close relations between B and C is found in 902, where a premature entry of the death of Ealhswiö, which must have originated in a blunder, appears in B and C only.

D

A Saxon Chronicle from the Incarnation to A.D. 1079.

This is one of the Cotton Manuscripts in the British Museum: The Worcester Chr. Cot. Tiber. B. iv. It is described by Wanley, p. 220; by nicle. Hardy, p. 657. It is written in the same hand to A. D. 1016, after which it exhibits varieties of penmanship, which are but faintly distinguishable.

This manuscript was called by Josselin Chronicon Wigornia:

and there is internal evidence to confirm this designation. Many of its marks of locality are common to it with C—and accordingly much that might belong here has been anticipated.

It remains to fix our attention on that which signalizes this Chronicle and distinguishes it from the others which have been described, but more especially from C. Here, for the first time, we find a descriptive Preface taking the place of the old genealogical one. But the chief distinction of this Chronicle arises from the introduction of additional materials, enlarging the field of history by digesting the Mercian and Northumbrian Annals in their relative chronological position. This amounts, as Mr. Hardy has already hinted, to the incorporation of a distinct Chronicle, or more than one, unless we suppose it to have been of a composite nature.

This element may be discerned forming a part or the whole of the annals 737, 744, 752*, 759, 760, 761, 762, 765*, 766*, 768*, 774, 776*, 777, 778*, 779, 780*, 782*, 785 (the legatine embassy from Rome is likewise found first in D), 788*, 789*, 790, 791*, 792, 793*, 794, 795*, 796, 797, 798*, 800, 802 (both these are eclipses of the moon, which appear to rest upon the northern authority), 803, 806*, at which point this source seems to stop. Here there is a large influx of material, which appears for the first time in D. The annals marked with an asterisk are entirely composed of new (northern) material. All this mass of particulars now flows into the series of our Chronicles for the first time, and through Florence it became the heritage of all the historians. Mr. Stubbs has supposed (Archaelogical Journal, No. 75, p. 236 note) that this collection may owe its origin to the distinguished bishop of Worcester, Wereferth, who sate from 873 to 915. one of the chief literary friends and allies of King Alfred, and Asser ascribes to him the Saxon Translation of Gregory's The part of the Chronicles which would be specially attributable to him, are the Mercian and Northumbrian materials of the eighth century, which we can trace back to Worcester and no further, and of which Wereferth may very well have been the collector and curator. It is quite in accordance with the position of Worcester as a bishopstol of Mercia, that the preservation of these pieces of history should be due to that monastery.

That D obtained the early or Winchester annals, direct from Winchester, and not through Canterbury or Abingdon, appears by a place in 877 where B and C both omit a clause which is necessary to the sense, and where D has the passage complete.

In the year 915, while keeping otherwise to his copy, he inserts four words [wæs Wærincwic getimbrod and] which tell the foundation of Warwick.

In the tenth century it has the annals 925, 926, 947, 948, peculiar to itself. And in 959 it is D that first exhibits the Rime of the Reign of Edgar. At this part D begins to break away from its old companionship with ABC and to strike into a new line, in which it is followed by EF. Thus we have the trio DEF on such salient passages as 959, 973 and 979. At 983 C joins this group, and CDE go on together till about 1020, F sometimes falling in and sometimes falling out. In this combination we must look upon D as the leader.

It is worthy of observation, that certain entries (956, 1023) in which the archbishop of York is styled simply "Archbishop," are traceable to D, and may have resulted from the intimacy which existed in the tenth century between the Sees of York and Worcester. There is an interesting mark of contemporaneity in 1012. It is there said that mighty works were done at the tomb of S. Alphege in London, and eleven years later (1123) we have the narrative of his translation to Canterbury. This is told with an interest and warmth peculiar to D, and I attribute the entry of 1012 to D rather than to C, who shares it. No Chronicle except D has an entry to the year 1026.

But the part in which D assumes a strong and distinct character of its own is after 1043, and the annal 1052(1) which relates the outlawry of Godwine is the most brilliant passage of this Chronicle. In this part it has several local particulars of Western Mercia, (1049, an earthquake was felt at Worcester, Wic(?), and Derby,) and of the Welsh wars, which are peculiar to itself. More especially to be noticed in this respect are the annals 1057–1063. In one of these (1059) is the consecration of a tower at Peterborough which is omitted by E, doubtless because that tower had been destroyed in the fire of 1116. More unaccountable is the omission in E of a fact in D, 1060, viz. that Archbishop Kinsie was buried at Peterborough. Was the site of his grave lost in the fire? When we come to the year 1066, we find D taking a distinct line from C, in that while the latter is entirely engaged with the events in the north, D is briefer about the two great fights there, and goes on to tell the Battle of Hastings, in which this Chronicle is singular, no one of the others giving any account of this decisive battle. The narrative is remarkable for its Saxon spirit, deploring the catastrophe as a judgment from heaven for national sin. In the thirteen years during which this Chronicle is continued below the Conquest, the matter is entirely new, that is, absent from previous Chronicles, and it has been only partially transferred to the pages of E.

Like C, this book ends with a memorandum by a strange hand in a strange dialect—only here the historical position of the event recorded is as problematical as the person of the recording historian. In this Edition it is printed in a distinct type, p. 216.

An interval in the series of Chronicles.

The gap of time between the close of this Chronicle and the commencement of that which comes next is over forty years, taken at its minimum. The latest entry of D is 1079, and the compilation of E took place, as will be shewn, in 1122. But the difference in character is far greater than this space of time would account for. The local difference must be taken into account, D being a western and E an eastern book. compilers of E have written almost, if not entirely, in the current phraseology of their day, and their diction is quite that of the twelfth century; whereas in D, though the most important part of it was written in the eleventh century, we find little to distinguish it from the language of the tenth century, and we feel that we have to do with the preserved and cultivated diction of a cloister. But at the same time the matter of the history is not so much infected with the spirit of the cloister in the earlier group as in the latter.

The earlier not "monas-

The Chronicles which have hitherto been described are so remarkably free from local colouring, that they barely afford sufficient internal evidence as to their native locality. It is more by external than by internal evidence that they are assigned to this or that monastery. At a later date, viz. in the thirteenth century, the Latin Annals acquired a strongly monastic character, and this has led to a confused way of treating all the early Chronicles, as if there were no difference between them. When it is said, that the monkish annals ignore matters of public concern, and that their attention is confined to the interests of the house or of the order—such criticism has no place in regard to A, B, C, D. If we except a late entry in A (1031), we shall hardly find a sentence in which local partiality has led the record off from the high road of national history. (Thus it has been observed by Mr. Hardy that E has more notices of Abingdon than D has.) But in the Chronicles of the twelfth century the narrowing influence of the cloister begins to be felt, though they do not become monastic in the full sense in which that term is emphatically applied to the Annals of the thirteenth century.

Ë

A Saxon Chronicle from the Incarnation to A.D. 1154.

This is one of the Laud manuscripts in the Bodleian Library, The Peter-Bodl. Laud 636 (formerly, E. 80). It is described by Wanley, Chronicle. p. 64; by Hardy, p. 657. In many respects this is the most important of the whole series of Chronicles. It gives 75 years' history beyond any of the others; and the variety of styles renders it one of the chief luminaries of the English language before the Conquest. It is in one hand to the end of 1121. It is a book of the Abbey of Peterborough, and affords copious proof of its own origin. Its existence is probably due to a disastrous fire that occurred at Peterborough, on Friday, August 3, 1116, in which the Minster was entirely consumed and all the buildings around except the Chapter House and Dormitory; most of the town was burnt also. Probably they lost their books, and it may have been in consequence of this loss that we find a new Chronicle started in 1121. The work may have been brought down to that date under superintendence, and then have passed from the scribe into the hand of the principal, who carried the record down to the close of 1131. The work being thus divided into an Old Part and a New Part, each must have a separate examination.

contents of A § 1 to § 7 (except the Preface, in which E follows D), besides some additional materials. These additions are, 1. The Anglican Chronicle of the eighth century, which has been already traced in D, where it appeared for the first time; 2. A small Chronicle of Frankish kings in Latin, e.g. 769, 778, 800, 810, 812, besides a few Latin entries of English history, e.g. 890, 892; 3. Large entries (documentary or quasi-documentary) on the foundation, endowment, privileges, &c., of Peterborough Abbey: e.g. 654, 656, 675, 686, 777, 852. Some of these are not only in the diction but also plainly are conceived in the spirit of a much later age than their date purports; as in 675 (p. 38) the extravagant pretence that the Abbot of Peterborough was to be papal legate for all England.

In these inserted pieces we find a confirmation of the date of E's compilation. A comparison of these with the language of the continuation after 1121 places it beyond doubt that the work was compiled at the date where the first hand stops. At the same time the diction of the insertions cannot be said to be identical with that after 1121; for the insertions have a slovenliness all their own. that the drawing up of these instruments was committed to a separate person, who had perhaps special qualifications in that respect, and that the scribe copied his whimsical orthography with scrupulous fidelity, as it was legal documents. In the rest of the text, though the orthography is modified, it is not brought to a uniformity with the insertions, and we mostly find the phraseology of the older books preserved in a mechanical sort of a way. But now and then an alteration seems to be forced upon the compiler, where the old phrase was too obsolete to be endured: e.g. in 688, A has and se papa hine heht Petrus, B and C only change the archaic spelling of heht to het, but E transforms the expression into and he him scop Petrum to name. The contents of these insertions are worthy of their date. Under the year 656, an exemption for the Abbey from episcopal superintendence is pretended (p. 31), confirmed by pope Vitalianus (p. 33), and under 675, confirmed by pope Agatho, whose bull is recited. course, is pure fiction, and a transplantation of the monkish ambition of the twelfth century back into the seventh.

- § 2. Between 892 and 991 is a very meagre century. EE. § 2. Sometimes a few brief annals barely redeem the blank, where the older books are richest. Together with some scraps from the fuller sources is found also some additional matter, especially touching northern affairs; e. g. 921, 927, 928 (Latin), 933, 942, 949, 952, 963. A few larger pieces, e. g. The Rimes of Edgar 959 and 975, and the Elegy on king Edward 979, complete this meagre century. Into the midst of these is inserted in the diction of 1121, the restoration of Peterborough Abbey under Bp. Athelwold, 963. The fine history of Edward the Elder, and his victorious career, is utterly ignored.
- § 3. With 991 (the year marked by the famous name of E.S. Brihtnoo) begins a series of comparatively unbroken continuity, if we overlook the gap at 1025, 1027, and that at 1035. where are faults running through all the Chronicles. here we observe traces of a literary motive which has not appeared in the earlier Chronicles. The compiler is not so much collecting a history as practising the art of book-making. Having a good store of records before him, he culls from this source and from that source such items as are interesting to himself, or where he has no preference he seems to take for each year quantum sufficiet. He had such a Chronicle as C, and such a Chronicle as D, for sometimes he is in verbal agreement with the one and sometimes with the other. He agrees with C in 1042, 1043, copying in the latter year a fact of merely local interest at Abingdon. And C appears to receive his first attention, the harmony between D and E being often through the medium of C. But that D was also present appears from such a case as 1020, where E has copied from D matter not found in C. In addition to C and D, however, our compiler had here the help of a chronicle which is otherwise unknown to us. From such a chronicle must that clause in 1041 have been copied, where king Edward is prayed for in terms which could only proceed from a contemporary. Healde ba hwile be him God unne: May he hold it as long as God permits—a formula like God save the King. Other independent annals about the same date, e.g. 1031, 1032, 1043, argue the presence of such a source. The author of this unknown Chronicle must be considered as the speaker in the spirited record of 1048, where he feels warmly on the subject of the Dover quarrel, and is on the side of Godwine. While on the one hand E brings in new matter from sources unknown to us, and thus swells the total of the historical collection, yet on the other hand he appears as an abbreviator or excerptor of history wherever we can compare his originals. In fact we have here the earliest example of a Flores Historiarum. We see large and interesting matters rejected, which we are confident met the compiler's eye—e.g. the deposition of Stigand, 1042. The passages relating to Burh (Peterborough) are original and earnest, e.g. 1066, 1069; and especially the account of the ravaging of the Abbey by Hereward and his gang in 1070. This Section closes perhaps with 1075.

E. § 4.

§ 4. This is a Section of peculiar interest. Passing over some annals which are mere collectanea and filling up, we enter with 1083 upon the work of a vigorous and sympathetic annalist, somewhat despondent and lugubrious, and prone to the gloomy view; but one whose diction has a certain gush, and whose whole work has the unity of a genuine and I cannot confidently trace his hand original outpouring. beyond the close of 1000. His language is pathetic, sometimes even passionate. The writer was certainly an old man. Frequent are such words as reowlic, 1086; and on p. 220 it occurs four times. It appears already in 1083. jection Eala too, 1086; and twice on p. 220. This Section corresponds partially with that portion of the Chronicles which has been assigned* to Wulfstan, the famous Bishop of Worcester. I so far agree with that view as to feel confident that the Section is dated from Worcester, but I do not believe Wulfstan to have been the author. The way in which Wulfstan is mentioned in 1087 (p. 2241) seems presumptive against his authorship, while it indicates some one who was conversant with him. It says: The revered bishop Wulfstan seeing these things was greatly disturbed in his mind: for he it was who had the charge of holding the castle.

^{*} Dean Hook (Archwological Journal, March 1863) accepts this authorship on the representation of the work entitled A Regular Dissection of the Saxon Chronicle, 1830.

The writer uses the first person (plural) several times (p. 223t; 1089, 1090), and in one oft-quoted place dwells on his qualification to describe the person of the Conqueror, so as we apprehended him, who looked on him and formerly resided at his court (p. 221 h).

In accordance with the experience claimed by this author is the extension of the horizon of observation which may here be noted; e.g. 1086, he notices Spanish affairs.

In this Section we first fall in with the modern Definite Article the: e.g. to be cynerice, 1076; be Arceb', 1085; be over man - be b'stol on Lundene, 1086. This feature demanded a passing remark; but the progress of the language as exhibited in these Chronicles is far too large a matter to be entered upon here.

Neither can we here find room to attempt so intricate and vext a subject as the Chronology of the Chronicles; but we may just note in passing that this Section seems to contain some indications of the year beginning with Lady Day. At this period the year mostly begins at Christmas, and C 1053 has been pointed out [in M. H. B. p. 118, note (3)] as a late example of beginning on March 25. But here we have in 1083 a notice of something that happened "the same year after midwinter;" and in 1085 the annal begins with the Easter Court. Of this Section let it suffice to add that it must ever reckon among the loci classici of history, and that it must be read in the original to be appreciated.

§ 5. The Section 1091-1121 (at the close of which the E.St. first hand comes to an end) may be distinguished from the last by its frequent use of the prepositional phrase Onmang; e.g. on many pam; on mang pisum, p. 227; on mang pison, Though differing from the former Section in its tokens of authorship, it appears to be indebted to the same source, at least in the first half of the Section, and to represent Worcester at second-hand. Through all the modifications which it receives in passing through the hand of the Peterborough compiler, it still preserves much of the splendid Wigornian eloquence which is known to us at first-hand in Chronicle D. The compiler of E had before him a Worcester chronicle which had been carried down to 1107, and this was his chief resource while it lasted, though he had others by the side of it. By comparing Florence in this part we find verbal resemblances, and where these fail, we still find identity of sequence in the paragraphs. By such tokens it plainly appears, that while Florence and E have each independent materials, yet that there is still a common element. Sometimes an original paragraph was inserted, written at Peterborough, and then we have an opportunity of seeing the contrast between English of Worcester modified at Peterborough, and the genuine English of Peterborough. readiest illustrations of this are in 1107 and 1114, where the paragraphs about Ernulf declare their own origin, and exhibit a strong contrast of language. The closing paragraphs in 1008 and 1102 are also examples. In the former of these two the writer feels for the tilth on marsh lands as became a resident in the fens. The same may be said of the notice in 1099 of damage caused by a high flood-tide. The bulletins of seasons, crops, &c., is quite a new feature in this Section, coming in as they do with a formal regularity at or towards the close of most of the annals. Perhaps a succession of bad seasons had compelled attention to the subject. altogether domestic Peterborough work, on which Worcester has no claim—they are not in Florence. In 1102 we detect an omission by E, where Florence gives a list of the Abbots who were deposed, and among them Godric, Abbot of Burh. These paragraphs are of nearly the same style as the large insertions above noticed concerning the Abbey of Peterborough. If not so identical as to indicate the same hand, they have enough general likeness to be of the same time and place. The annal 1114 helps to confirm the prima facie date of the compilation of E down to 1121. It ends with an ejaculation for the welfare of Ernulf as living:and he died in 1124. In 1106 there is a complication of dates. The account of a strange star appears to have been put on record at the time of its appearance, and then in 1122 when that memorandum was inserted in the Chronicle, a further comment was added: Divers persons said that they in these times saw more strange stars, but we wrote it not more particularly (openlicor), because we did not see it ourselves.

It is a strong feature of this Section, that as a rule each annal begins with a notice of the King's Christmas Court, those of Easter and Whitsuntide being sometimes added. It is worthy of notice that there are three expressions for Christmas, and that the preposition which goes with them is always "to." Thus: to mide wintra—to Cristes mæssan—to Natiuiteo. There is no doubt here at what season the year begins. At the same time however that the year begins at Christmas, we find (1096) January I, after the old Roman Calendar, spoken of as geares dæg, i.e. Year's Day, Jour de l'An. None of these Curial Fasti are in Florence.

§ 6. Comprising 1122-1131. This is probably the continuation of the Peterborough interpolator or of his collaborateur. At any rate, this appears to be ten years of genuine Peterborough chronicling. Here therefore we consider that E is for the first time standing on its own ground. The date 1122 seems to have been recognised at Peterborough as the beginning of a new local era. The Chronicon Petroburgense (printed by the Camden Society, Ed. Stapleton) begins at 1122; though the main business of that book, viz. the administration of Abbot Robert de London, dates from 1274.

With this Section that provincial diction and orthography which has appeared hitherto only at intervals, becomes The king's name is generally spelt Heanri; prevalent. and many other words shew ea contrary to the usual orthography. Examples: weas, wearen, forbearnde, hwear, dear, seagon, Gleastingbyrig, geamene, heafde, beteahte, heafdon, 1101. Such forms are rarely found in the earlier parts: e.g. streang &, heafde. Other novelties in spelling are Norhtwic, Norhthamtune, burch 1122, Burch 1124. That this would have been considered negligent English by many even at that time we may see by the hand of a corrector that has been at work in one or two places. Thus on p. 252 he has corrected heftninge to the literary form heftnunge, and he has supplied a was, indicating that weas or even was was not according to approved orthography. There are in this Section three allusions to portions of the Liturgy (1122, 1127, 1131), of which the opening words are cited. Notices of the physical condition of the people grow more explicit, and towards the close of the Section ejaculations thicken. There is every appearance that the writing of these annals followed close upon the events. For example, the closing words of 1127 indicate that the ejection of Abbot Henri, which took place in 1132, was at the date of writing vet future.

B. § 7. § 7. The last Continuation, 1132-1154, is also undoubtedly a domestic composition of Peterborough. Written twenty-five years later, it measures the decadence of the language at the self-same spot, and shews what it had become after transmission to a succeeding generation, the latest that ever wrote history in Englisc.

> In this Section, among other modernisms, we may note that th is common, as a substitute for the old or the older b. Some letters have changed their forms, especially r, which is no longer written p, but with a nearer approach to our modern r, and becoming withal so like r, the character used in Saxon writing for s, that it misled Gibson to edit rachenteges as sachenteges, of which word he notes, Que sit hujus vocabuli significatio videant alii.

> The manuscript of this Chronicle (E) has been described by Mr. Hardy as ending in a mutilated state; and Wanley seems to convey the same idea by saying abruptè desinit Codex. Certainly the manuscript gives this impression at first sight; indeed it requires a minute and patient examination to discover the fact that there is no mutilation. The last page appears to have been long exposed to accidents without a cover, and it has been so rubbed that its contents are but partially and faintly legible. Dr. Ingram went far astray in reading it, and his interpretation of the closing annal was one of the most fanciful things that the study of these Chronicles has ever engendered. But it will be seen by the text here presented that it has been nearly all made out, and that the last clause was a pious commendation of the new Abbot, and that it terminates formally with a triangular punctuation. The italics are not conjectures, but copied from the MS. with much difficulty, and consequently some uncertainty. But I believe I have not printed (without brackets) a single letter which I have not seen. When in doubt, I tested my reading by referring to my ever-ready friend, the Rev. Henry Octavius Coxe, now Bodleian Librarian. Those only are conjectures which are enclosed in brackets.

This Chronicle appropriately ends with a local record, as with a keynote. The pervading spirit of the work is local, as that of the former four is national. The old chronicles are made use of chiefly as a setting for the Annals of Peterborough, and it is sensibly felt throughout that the reader is rapidly approaching the time when their cloister was to be all the world to the English monks. Political news is entered merely as matter of curiosity, and as a contribution to domestic entertainment. The generous forward and onward movement which enlivens the first group is here replaced by a backward and retrospective lingering, animated by no stronger passion than the desire to save a few scraps out of the general wreck. Both E and F are scrap-books of History, and they belong to that class of compositions which attained its full development in the Latin Flores Historiarum.

Our present manuscript was probably one of the very last vernacular histories written in England, and almost certainly the last ever compiled in Peterborough Abbey. From this time they adopted the Latin, and produced many chronicles in that language. The collection in Sparke's folio Historiæ Anglicanæ Scriptores are mostly works of Peterborough extraction, and give Peterborough a prominent place. Hugo Candidus appears to have made use of this Chronicle (E), from which he took the past history and rights of the Abbey, amplifying it rather in treatment than in substance. In his first sentences he declares that he wrote nothing de suo proprio, but that he had found it all in old Histories.

The Laud MS. has a considerable number of blunders in it which all Editors have uniformly corrected. But over and above these there are a certain number of cases in which it may be doubtful whether we have an error or a provincial peculiarity. My rule has been in doubtful cases to keep to the reading of the MS. A very common instance is d for 5, and reversely. I believe I have retained the reading of the MS. in such cases more frequently than any other editor; and if I had the text to print again, with eight years more experience, I should probably change still less.

The two Chronicles which remain to be noticed need not occupy us long. They are both of Canterbury, and both of minor value, but in other respects very dissimilar.

F

A Saxon and Latin Chronicle from the Incarnation to A.D. 1058.

A bilingual Chronicle of

This is one of the Cotton manuscripts in the British Museum: Canterbury. Cott. Domitian A. viii. It is described by Wanley, p. 220; by Hardy, p. 660. This is the "Cod. Cotton" of Gibson. It is in one hand throughout, and that a feeble shambling one, not unlike the late interpolator (a) in A. A good place for identifying these two litterateurs is 043, where the text of F fits in exactly to supply a mutilation in a. It must be ascribed to the twelfth century; its abrupt ending at 1058 affords no token of date. It marks by its bilingual arrangement the transition period from the use of the vernacular to the use of the Latin in English history. There is no external tradition informing us to what home it belonged, but the internal evidence assigns it to Christ Church, Canterburv.

> The matter which is peculiar to it belongs to Kentish ecclesiastical history, and the first piece is a narrative of the Council of Baccancelde at which Wihtred king of Kent presided, in In 784 his Latin gives a curious double interpretation of the HER with which the Saxon Annals begin: 784 Hic tunc temporis fuit in Cantia rex Ealhmundus. In 1006, it shews a very characterizing lection, prutne here and uneargne, where CDE have ranche here and unearline. This is probably the oldest example of the French Prud used in our modern sense of Proud: and it seems to imply an advanced decade of the twelfth century. Some of the entries are only in Latin. One of these is Cnut's grant of the port-dues of Sandwich to Christ Church, of which A's account (1031) is mutilated. This whole Chronicle bears a literary affinity to § 11 of A, which we have traced to the Cathedral Minster at Canterbury, and we have yet to notice another book which issued (but earlier than F) from the same Scriptorium.

G

A Saxon Chronicle from Julius Casar to A.D. 1001.

This is one of the Cotton manuscripts in the British Museum, A Canterbury Edition marked Otho, B. xi. It is noticed in Wanley, p. 210; and of the Windescribed by Mr. Hardy, p. 654. This volume was supposed Chronicle. to have entirely perished in the fire of 1731 that destroyed much of the Cottonian Library then at Westminster. three leaves, including annals from 837 to 871, have been recovered, and a facsimile of one of them is given in the Monumenta Historica Britannica. The handwriting is of the eleventh century and is most like that of Chronicle B. It also resembles that of the manuscript of Beowulf. In matter, it is simply a copy (without extra insertions) of § 1—§ 10 of Chronicle A, and made probably before A contained any subsequent addi-Happily, this manuscript had been printed by Wheloc, whose edition is now our authority for most of this text. No other copy could have been spared with less damage, because no other had been edited without intermixture of texts. Among Usher's Collections in Dublin, there is a transcript by Lambard, "apparently," says Mr. Hardy, "of this MS."

Seeing the close resemblance of this manuscript to A, and the fact that its antiquity is not clearly inferior to that of any manuscript except A, I was dissatisfied with the notation G, and I have sometimes designated it as A, a more modern form of A. The sign G wrongs this copy in point of date in placing it at the end of the series—while on the other hand it fails to represent the fact that it now rests on an Edition and not on manuscript authority. The sign A as being a shadow of A. or the sign W, the initial of Wheloc, which Mr. Thorpe has adopted, expresses this better. There is this objection to Mr. Thorpe's notation, that we lose the means of indicating the manuscript independently of the edition.

This edition is really a servile reproduction of A, with nothing original but its spelling. It seems to have been made from A in the eleventh century at Christ Church (Canterbury) at the time they received A from Winchester, and before they had made any of the later or Kentish additions to A. Had we not possessed A itself, this copy would have been highly esteemed. The following are some of its variations in spelling:

A	G (A)
Creoding. Creoda	Cryding. Cryda 626
þeode	þiode 627
huerf	hwerf 633
Eadwig	Eadwic
cyning	cyninc

scire	scyre 851
ridon hie þider	rydon hy öyder
hieran	hyran 897
hierdon	hyrdon
gehierdun	gehyrdun
Sigulf	Siwulf 905

hiera J	l hiora

It prefers the δ to the p, the y to the i (also for eo)—but its chief novelties are in the gutturals: e.g. Wicganbeorche 851, doctor (=dohtor) 853.

One thing that distinctly classes G (A) with the elder group T BCD, and distinguishes it from the younger group E F a, is its keeping the old genealogies.

The handwriting exhibits that peculiar y which is a prominent feature in the calligraphy of T, and which may be seen in the facsimiles. See Monumenta Historica Britannica for a specimen from the earlier annals, and Mr. Thorpe's edition for an extract from the tenth century.

Supposed traces of other Saxon Chronicles. The known copies of Saxon Chronicles having now been described, it remains to consider what likelihood there is that more copies may yet be discovered, or whether there are any traces or notices in literature which justify such an expectation. For there have been surmisings of the kind in more quarters than one. Dr. Ingram supposed that the "Hist. Petrob." referred to as the authority of certain collations in D, indicated a Chronicle which we do not now possess. But a comparison of these readings with the text of E will demonstrate that no other book is meant, but E itself, which has so just a title to be called a Peterborough History. A more promising trace seemed to be indicated in the Monumenta Historica Britannica (Pref. p. 77 note), where, as a hint to future enquirers, is quoted a note of Dr. Brett's citing Dom Ruinart's Life of Pope Urban for the fact that there was in his time a manuscript Saxon Chronicle in the Abbey of S. Germains des Prés. During the French Revolution, the manuscripts of the Abbey of S. Germains that had not already been stolen were removed into the Bibliothèque Imperiale, and my valued friend M. le Vicomte de la Villemarqué made, at my request, the most careful search and enquiry to see if any such a Saxon Chronicle could there be found. He identified the passage in Dom Ruinart, which is as follows; "Nusquam legitur quot vel qui episcopi ei [synodo] interfuerint, nisi quod in veteri chronico Saxonico quod Ms. habemus, dicatur Henricus in ea Synodo à ducentis ferè patribus communione ecclesiastica privatus fuisse." What manner of book was indicated by this vague expression, whether vernacular or Latin, insular or continental, was uncertain, and the doubt would still have existed to tantalize the enquirer, had not my indefatigable friend a second time renewed the search, and succeeded in identifying the volume in the Manuscript Department of the Bibliothèque Imperiale. It is marked S. G. P. [S. Germains des Prés] No. 440, and is entitled Chronicon Saxonicon, but its second title and that which indicates its real character, is Chronicon Magdeburgense ab anno Dni 741 ad annum 1139. It is in Latin, and has been published in the Collections of Dom Bouquet and of Pertz.

We proceed next to trace the course of Saxon history as Gradual emanating from these Chronicles, and embodied by the earliest Latin Annalists, and then to observe how it gradually fell into neglect, until the Revival of Literature again drew attention to the originals, and a reconstruction of our early history has been the consequence.

The Biography of Alfred which is attributed rightly or wrongly to Asser, has embodied the whole contents of the Chronicle from 851 to 887, with other matter; and it is no easy problem to solve in what relation these Latin annals stand to our Saxon text. In some parts the Latin is the more ample (e.g. 853), and one might incline to think the Saxon a vernacular abridgment of the Latin original. Reversely in 855, the Latin wears the aspect of a translation many removes apart from the original Saxon, the sense of which is at once amplified and corrupted. But the whole question is surrounded with difficulties, and it does not appear to me to find a solution in Mr. T. Wright's rejection of the authenticity. No theory of the authorship and date of the work has ever been proposed which on the whole meets the facts of the case better than that set forth in the book itself, that it was written in 893. And I consider the fact of the coincidence with A ending so early as 887, at a place where we have independent reasons for declaring a natural break (see above, A § 7) in the Saxon Chronicle, is strongly in favour of the truthfulness of the professed date.

The Latin

But the first comprehensive Latin work founded on the Chronicle of Bibelweard. Saxon Chronicles is that which bears the magnificent name of Patricius Consul Fabius Quæstor Ethelwerdus.

> The best judges* seem to agree in identifying the chronicler Æthelweard, with that 'Ealdorman Ethelwerd' to whom Ælfric addressed certain of his works, and likewise with Æðelward ealdorman who was sent in 994 to Anlaf at Southampton. Possibly he is also the same with the 'Æthelwerd Dux' who signs charters 976-998.

> Æthelweard's Chronicle closes with the last year of Eadgar's reign. That it is in the main a translation of vernacular Chronicles cannot be doubted. The close resemblance which it bears to some which we now possess, especially (as Mr. Stevenson says) to A, leaves no room for speculation as to whence Æthelweard obtained the main body of his material. The only uncertainty in regard to his work is, how much of that which is peculiar to his Chronicle was found in the Saxon Chronicle which he used—in other words, how far we may assume the existence at the close of the tenth century of a Saxon Chronicle or Chronicles like the Latin Chronicle of Æthelweard. It is quite conceivable that with his noble connections and high public offices he might have had access to occasional gleanings of new information, and thus he may possibly have been not merely a translator-'the most monstrously absurd of all pedantic translators—but in some little measure an original chronicler and an enricher of the stores of history. Provoking and irritating as this writer's manner is, we cannot but prize highly the possession of his work. He is the only Latin Chronicler that breaks the vast blank from Asser to Florence, a space of two centuries—his faults illustrate while they caricature the culture of his time — and his mistakes afford the best light to shew us what originals he was working from. It is specially in this aspect that he claims attention here, and therefore a few particulars shall be given of the information which is peculiar to him, and also of the passages in which he discovers an acquaintance with our Saxon Chronicles.

Describing the Saxon people somewhat after the manner of E 449, he adds: Porro Anglia Vetus sita est inter Saxones et Giotos, habens oppidum capitale, quod sermone Saxonico Slesuuic nuncupatur, secundum vero Danos, Haitheby. Ideoque Britannia nunc Anglia appellatur, assumens nomen victorum.

- 500. Sexto etiam anno adventus eorum (i.e. of Cerdic and Cynric) occidentalem circumierunt Britanniæ partem, quæ nunc Uuest-Sexe nuncupatur.
- 519. The battle of Cerdicesford, where Cerdic and Cynric conquered the Britains and from which dates the rise of the kingdom of Wessex, is described as being "in fluvio Avene"—which Mr. Riley considers decisive for Charford on the Avon, Hants.
- of more notice than that bestowed by the Editors of M H B, "Hallucinatus est Ethelwerdus;" he was clearly half asleep when he translated "æt Peonnum," i. e. at Pen, into Latin by the words "et Pionna,"—thus "Cenmeath et Pionna reges, &c.," thus transforming Pen from a battlefield into a king. The other case is also that of mere inattention, where he has rendered the two words "gehergeade Wulfhere" as if Wulfhere were the object instead of the subject of

- the verb. But we have this interesting result, that by finding the cause of his errors in our extant Saxon text we obtain a demonstration of the fact that Æthelweard was translating Saxon Chronicles, and those so far identical with our own.
- 710. Here the translator makes the Cornish king Gerent to be called "Uuthgirete," because his Saxon said that Ine and Nun fought "wid Gerent," i.e. against Gerent; he blending the preposition with the name, says, "Nunna et Ine reges bellum gesserunt contra Uuthgirete."
- 787. The passage about the first arrival of the Danes is quoted in the Notes to this date.
- 823. Of the slain at Ellendun: "et Hun ibi occiditur dux provinciæ Sumorsæton; requiescitque nunc in urbe Uuintana."
- 855. After Æpelwulf's pedigree (in which Bældæg is called Balder), he gives a peculiar legend of Scef: "Ipse Scef cum uno dromone advectus est in insula oceani quæ dicitur Scani, armis circundatus, eratque valde recens puer, et ab incolis illius terræ ignotus; attamen ab eis suscipitur, et ut familiarem diligenti animo eum custodierunt, et post in regem eligunt; de cujus prosapia ordinem trahit Athulf rex."
- 867. "in eodem anno migravit Eanulf dux provinciæ Sumersetun," (and presently his burial) "ducis quippe supradicti in cœnobio quod Glastingabyrig nuncupatur."
- 870. The burial of Edmund king of E. Anglia at Bury St. Edmunds: "cujus corpus jacet mausoleatum in loco qui Beadoricesuuyrthe nuncupatur."
- 871. He tells a strange story of Æpelwulf aldorman, who fell at Reading: "Corpus quippe supradicti ducis abstrahitur furtim, adduciturque in Merciorum provinciam, in locum qui Northworthige nuncupatur, juxta autem Danaam linguam Deoraby." But we cannot credit extraordinary tales in a writer who is capable of such a blunder as that which follows.

876. Et in ipsius anni decursu, exercitus qui in Grantanbricge fuerat, conjecit statum communem cum occidentali exercitu, quod ante non usi sunt. juxta oppidum quod Vuerham nuncupatur, depopulataque est ab eis pars major provinciæ illius. rex pactum cum eis pacis confirmat, simulque pecuniam dando. Unlike as this is to the present Saxon texts, it is plain that Æthelweard had our Saxon text before him. The clauses peculiar to him are here printed in thick type, and indeed they are most peculiar and extraordinary. He makes the army at Cambridge to join in common quarters (statum communem) with the western army, a thing which has no existence at all. Yet this community of encampment and that visionary western army are both extracted out of the genuine Saxon text. He manifestly understood "bestæl" in the sense of "installing;" making the same mistake (inversely) as that which has been made about the word "stælwyroe," (p. 94, and see note). Hence his "conjecit statum communem!" Then the western army-" cum occidentali exercitu,"-is a substitution for the opposite party, viz. the West-Saxon militia, "Wessexena fierde!" After this, we need hardly trouble ourselves to search for the original of his next special piece of information—that Alfred bought and paid for the treaty! A thing so incongruous to the whole tenor of events must come through better hands than Æthelweard's before we need concern ourselves about it.

But the Annalist who was the most vigorous of all the Latin The Latin compilers, and who more than any other embodied the Saxon Florence of Worcester. Chronicles into his work, was Florence of Worcester. He died in 1118, four years before the compilation of E, and his last annal is 1117. But the first Continuator who carries his Chronicle on to 1141 goes over the ground occupied by those subsequent annals which are the special property of E. The narrative of Florence may often be identified with the Saxon Chronicle, more especially with D (for the early part), whose words are sometimes rendered into strange forms of Florence of Worcester. Latin, as in 1052 (1051) where the micel unræd of D is Latinized into magnum insilium. The intimacy between Florence and D is another proof of the Worcester nativity For the period after 1079, where our D ceases, of the latter. Florence must certainly have had by him a continuation of that same Chronicle (now lost), which continuation was excerpted from by the compiler of E. There seems no other way of explaining the result of a comparison between Florence and the only Saxon Chronicle (E) which here remains to be compared. Florence appears to give the whole Chronicle of which E presents selections. Thus the death of Wulfstan, which is told in Florence with the utmost pomp, is omitted in E. the other hand the great passage of E (1085 sqq.) which has been called "The Annals of Wulfstan" are not found in Florence—a thing quite unlikely had they really been Wulf-After the date of 1107 the affinity with Florence Subsequent historians followed Florence, and the narrative of E from 1107 to 1154 remained unknown to history until modern times.

A good illustration of the wide interval between the early Saxon Chronicles and Florence is supplied in 901, the account of the death of Alfred. There is in the original all the simplicity of a contemporary bulletin, but in Florence is seen the magnifying effect of two centuries of posthumous fame. It is for the sake of this contrast that the parallel passage of Florence is given opposite to A 901 (p. 97).

There is often an amplification of language in the Latin annalists which might seem at first sight to point to a fuller record than these Saxon originals, when it is really no more than a rhetorical expansion. The following parallel furnishes only an ordinary example:—

and se Ecgbryht lædde fyrde to Dore wið Norðhymbre and hi him þær eadmedo budon and geþwærnysse and hi on þam to hwurfon. FLORENCE 827.

Deinde suam movit expeditionem ultra Humbræ flumen; cui Northymbrenses, in loco qui Dore vocatur, occurrentes pacificè, ei concordiam humilemque subjectionem obtulere; et sic ab invicem divisi sunt magna mentis alacritate.

There are, however, important additions in Florence, both Florence of such as might be expected from his seeing Chronicles lost to us, and also observations and reflections such as contemporary writers were not in a position to make. Thus in 1007, where all the Saxon Chronicles merely notice in the fewest words the appointment of Eadric as ealdorman of Mercia, Florence draws his character and gives enough of his pedigree to exhibit the degree of kin in which Earl Godwine stood to him.

Where, however, the Saxon is unintelligible, and we expect light from early Latin translators, there it is rare to get They seem to have felt the same difficulties as we do. Thus in the next annal to that last noticed, viz. in 1008, where there is much obscurity, we find in Florence nothing but a bald verbal translation, and we only learn from it that he had the same Saxon before him as we have, and could make no more of it than we can.

Simeon of Durham need only be noticed here with reference to the first of the two Chronicles that go by his Into this composition the Saxon Chronicles do not largely enter-but he produces between 735 and 802 materials from some Northern chronicles or registers that we have no other trace of.

Henry of Huntingdon was wanting in some of the chief The Latin Chronicle of qualities which make a historian, but he was richly endowed Henry of Huntingwith those of secondary rank. He was a bad chronographer, don. and not jealous of inaccuracy; but he delighted in graphic narration and he had a poetical love for antiquity. an amateur and an antiquarian. To him we owe the earliest mention of Stonehenge. He had a great fondness for the old Saxon Chronicles, which in his day were already something curious and out of date, although his Annals close at the same date as E, viz. 1154. He does not decline to notice the old genealogies, leading up to Woden or higher, and which the enlightened of his day affected to despise. Nay, it is in that twilight of history, where the Saxon Chronicle is of most dubious authenticity, that he has poured out the wealth of his historical rhetoric, imitated from Orosius and perhaps some historians of the classic age. Thus in 508 he has expanded two lines into a circumstantial battle-field occupying a considerable paragraph. In 514 we have another example of fictitious Henry of Huntingdon. ornament, only here he draws not upon his classic studies, but upon his memories of old native poetry, which are far more entertaining. On the whole it may be said that not one of the early Chroniclers shews so much of the Englishman, and none grounded his work so entirely on Saxon Chronicles.

He is the only one who has attempted a Latin version of the old Saxon ballads. His translation has been quoted on page 113 opposite to the old Song of the Battle of Brunanburh, and it may readily be seen how the old poetic Englisc puzzled He was forty or fifty years junior to Florence, and in the twelfth century this interval made a great difference in the transition of the language. Florence rendered the short annal of 671 Hær wæs þæt micle fugla wæl thus, Avium strages facta est permaxima, but Henry of Huntingdon by Maxima pugna volucrum in Anglia: and he goes on to confirm the credibility of such an event by averring that a battle of the birds had happened at Rouen in his own day, that thousands were slain, and that the foreign birds took to flight. It cannot be said that the word well excludes this interpretation; it is in fact just as dubious as Florence's Latin strages, who seems to have exercised a sort of economy in adopting this exact verbal rendering. Roger of Wendover took the Battle of the Birds for his Flores Historiarum, using the phraseology of Henry of Huntingdon, except that the millia occisa became multa millia occisa.

Henry of Huntingdon has the appearance of special knowledge in two or three places concerning the kingdom of Kent at the crisis of its fate, when it was about to be merged in the growing power of Mercia. Lappenberg gives him credit for it (Geschichte, vol. i. p. 233), but on examination it comes to nothing in every case but one. That one is considered in my note A. D. 785.

On the year 1006 I cannot forbear to notice a rendering which has both surprised and gratified me. I have ventured, in a note on this annal, to paraphrase what appeared to me to be the feeling conveyed in the words to heora garwan feorme, and which I imagined no one had pointed out. Florence neglects it, and I had overlooked Henry of Huntingdon who has given it admirably: Quocumque autem pergebant, que parata erant hilariter comedentes, cum discederent in retribu-tionem procurationis reddebant hospiti cædem hospitio flam-Henry of Hunting-

In the year 1008 we have a specimen of his antiquarianism, in the definition, which he has added, of a 'Hide': Hida autem Anglice vocatur terra unius aratri culturæ sufficiens per annum.

Again in 1011, the Sack of Canterbury, we see that he had before him the old Elegy Wæs da ræpling &c. (C D E), which we cannot trace in the lamentations of Florence.

These are the Latin Annalists of the first rank after the Neglect of Saxon Chronicles, and these became the new medium of the rature. old Saxon history. We perceive in reading their pages, and in Henry more than any other, that Saxon Literature is already a thing of the past. If we had not been able to look as it were through their eyes at the Saxon Chronicles, we could not have discovered how antiquated they had become in the twelfth century. Already in 1154, where Henry and E alike end, the country had gone far in that transition which made Saxon a dead language. The continuation of E down to a date which enables it to close abreast of Henry, is a peculiarity and must be regarded as a mark of special attachment to the old neglected vernacular. In those days of local isolation there were many places in which a fashion or a sentiment might hold out as in a stronghold against a prevalent disposition for change. Nor is it perhaps altogether foreign to remark, that this specimen of a Saxon Chronicle which overlived its day, comes to us from that part of England which has the credit of having stood out longest for Saxon independence.

William of Malmesbury comes after Henry of Huntingdon, William of not as a matter of dates, but as belonging to a new class of bury. He aimed at being a historian of a higher order, at grouping his history, and making it more instructive and entertaining. To a certain extent he succeeded: but he too utterly slighted the office of the chronographer. The further history departs in form from the Chronicle, the more necessary is it that the historian should be strong in his chronographic elements. Malmesbury was not so-he sometimes inverts the order of events. His main idea was entertainment, and for that purpose he embodied materials not only from Chronicles and other sources properly historical, but also took the attractive stories out of the hagiographies. He does not, like Wendover, adopt a title which avowedly sets forth this intention; but history was now moving altogether in the direction of Flores Historiarum or Elegant Extracts out of Historybooks.

As Malmesbury used a variety of sources for English History, and as he moreover worked in a good deal of contemporary foreign history occasionally, and all this without making his work much more bulky than that of Florence—it follows manifestly that he had less room to spare for the Saxon Chronicles, of which large portions were now dropped out of history, not again to be taken up, until modern times. For Malmesbury's work carried with it a prestige of finality,—and it was long before any one reopened the sources from whence he had Thus it came to pass, that with the growing mass of ever-accumulating materials of history, the later having always preference over the earlier, the Saxon period shrunk up into the smallest compass and no one ever attempted to reconstruct it. The work of Matthew of Westminster two centuries later, was the next history that obtained a wide circulation—but it was, as its title bears, a Flores Historiarum. When English history had been for three centuries and more in the hands of these Latin historians, and when the mother tongue begins again to appear in history, Saxon history had almost vanished. What place it held in the view of the historians of the fifteenth century we may judge from Capgrave's Chronicle of England. The Provincial of the Austin Friars composed this work in his old age for his own particular use, as a mnemonic of history. Here is his own account of it: Now is age com, and I want ny al that schuld longe to a ftudier; yet it pleased me, as for a solace, to gader a fchort remembrauns of elde ftories, that whanne I loke upon hem, and have a schort touch of the writing, I can fone dilate the circumstaunses. It is instructive to note how little Saxon history was appreciated by this diligent student and voluminous writer, one of the most learned men of his His Chronicle is busied about Popes and Emperors and Sarasines, &c., insomuch that his Saxon ancestors never get mentioned till 701. Then he produces "the Heptarchy" complete: And undir this Pope too Kyngis of Ynglond went to Rome, and were mad there monkis; and this was aftir the Brutes blood was oute of the lond, for than was the lond divided in to vii kyngdammes.

And ye schal undirstand that this division began in the first coming of Saxones, whech was in the 3ere of oure Lord 455. And here we will expresse the vii regiones, who [how] thei were departed in this lond.

The first kyngdam was in Kent, where the first Kyng was Hengist, &c.

After an interval which fills ten octavo pages we have another notice of Saxon history, under 855, as follows:—

In this tyme the Danes aryved into Ynglond, with too curfed captaynes, Hingwar and Hubba. Thei diftroyed the cuntre, and killid the glorious Kyng Edmund, first with schot of arowis, and then smete of his heed.

The history of King Alfred is disposed of in the following lines:—

In this tyme regned Alured in Ynglond, the fourt son of Adelwold. He began to regn in the 3ere of our Lord DCCCLXXII. This man, be the councelle of Seint Ned, mad an open Scole of divers fciens at Oxenford. He had many batailes with Danes; and aftir many conflictes in which he had the were, at the laft he overcam hem; and be his trety Godrus here Kyng was baptized, and went hom with his puple. XXVIII 3ere he regned, and deied the servaunt of God.

These illustrations will serve to shew to what a state of inanition Saxon history was reduced in the fifteenth century. Few only of the historical names are known, and these are handled with a strangeness suitable only to phantoms like Cophetua, Moelmud, and Pharamund. There is a seminythical air over the feeble narrative, which might have developed into a downright myth, but for lack of interest.

The 'Heptarchy' itself is a real myth, a thing which no writer could have propagated, but under the favouring shadow of general ignorance. In short, Saxon history was lost and forgotten. It has been admirably observed by Lappenberg, that the splendour of the Norman aristocracy extinguished the memory of Saxon times, and that Shakspeare, whose genius found materials in all lands, and in all ages of European history; who took Macbeth from the Scots, and Hamlet from the Danes, and even went to the British legends for his Lear; that he, who spoke and who incomparably adorned the language of his Saxon ancestors, found in the rich treasures of their history no subject on which he thought he could secure attention. The first steps towards a revival of this ancient domestic history had been made before Shakspeare's time, but the public was not yet affected by them. So great was the indifference to a history which was all but utterly forgotten, that we can only wonder that even a few Chronicles survived the confusion of the Dissolution of the Monasteries when such stores of ancient manuscripts perished. Had not the curiosity of a few learned men saved our Saxon Chronicles from the fate of waste parchment, what would have been our condition with reference to Saxon History? We should have been in almost as great uncertainty about it as we are about the ancient British annals. Had there not been a great literary revival in time to rescue the Saxon Chronicles, and to bring forth into new light the neglected early annalists who were the immediate representatives of the Saxon Chroniclers, we should have had to ground our Saxon history on such authors as Matthew of Westminster, or at best, on William of Malmesbury. And when criticism had sifted his work of the romantic element, the poor residuum of history would have laboured under the gravest doubt by reason of its close intermixture with so much that was legendary. Again, even if the first row of Latiners had been recovered, Florence, Simeon, and Henry, and our ultimate resource had been to correct them by each other, there would still have remained a great cloud of uncertainty. Being quite in the dark as to the nature and degree of excellence of the older Chronicles which they must have used, we should certainly have presumed that they were very far inferior to what we now perceive them to be, and the whole of our early history would have lost its foundation and its credentials. The very analogy of contemporary vernacular literature, the best argument in the absence of testimony direct, would have misled us into a contemptuous undervaluing of the lost originals from which Florence and his co-ordinates worked. The Saxon Chronicles which we possess are the guarantees of the truth and fidelity of the subsequent historians, and the changeful mother tongue gives that touch of confidence which the fixed and rigid Latin, much the same everywhere, could never have imparted.

It is possible that there were parts of England still, where in some remote cloister the old historical literature was not wholly neglected. Some faint sound has been heard of the Saxon studies of the Abbey of Tavistock. And there is reason to think that this was the case to a comparatively late period at Peterborough. It will be seen from some marginal writing which has been printed in this Edition, that the Peterborough Chronicle continued to be read in the fourteenth century. These side notes are given sometimes in blacf letter, as on pp. 37, 38, 67, 121, 123, 131, 249, 253, 255, &c., and occasionally in facsimile, as on pp. 39, 121.

Among the names that are eminent as the appreciators and conservers of these old chronicles, are Matthew Parker, Archbishop of Canterbury (b. 1504, d. 1575), and Joscelin his Secretary; Sir Robert Cotton; William Lambard, the Kentish Topographer; Camden, the father of British archæology; and half a century later, Archbishop Laud. Laud's collections were given to the Bodleian Library: Sir R. Cotton's have found a resting-place (such of them as remain unconsumed) in the British Museum: and those of Archbishop Parker were given to Corpus Christi College at Cambridge.

Archbishop Parker sent about the country for old manuscripts, especially Saxon and English.* He had been Bible-Clerk, Fellow, and Master of Benet College (now Corpus Christi), and this accounts for the disposition of his valuable collection of MSS., among them Chronicle A, to the keeping of that Society. The first indenture conveying his gift of books and manuscripts to the College was made in 1569, but it was superseded by others in 1571 and 1574, and the books were not delivered until after his death in 1575. The only earlier notice we have of A is in a note by Joscelin on the margin of B, where he seems to speak of A almost as if Dr. Wotton, Dean of Canterbury, were the owner of it. Having supplied the annal of 675, which is wanting in B, he thus annotes: Have in vetustiore Saxonica

historia quam habet Doctor Wutton Decanus Eccl'iæ Chri

This Dr. Wotton (Nicholas) was the first Dean of Canterbury, made by Henry VIII in 1541, after the Dissolution. He was also made Dean of York (1544), and Prebendary of York (1545). He managed to hold both Deaneries under Henry, Edward, Mary, and Elizabeth. He was one of Henry VIII's executors, of Edward VI's privy-council, Secretary of State (1549-50), Ambassador to Naples (1551), one of Queen Elizabeth's first privy-council. He died January 26, 1567. This distinguished and well-endowed ecclesiastic was a papist, and therefore Archbishop Parker can hardly be considered as an impartial judge of his character; but he speaks of "Mr. dean Wotton" as having been not over scrupulous about appropriating church property*. A fine Italian statue of him (kneeling) may be seen in the Cathedral at Canterbury, at the N.E. curve of the apse, close to where was once the shrine of Becket. He was great-uncle to Isaac Walton's Sir Henry Wotton.

Joseelin is called by Strype (P. ii. 251), "John Josselyn, an Essex man, the Archbishop's Secretary." In the same page it appears that he wrote himself "Mr. John Goscelin." Elsewhere he is spoken of as Sir Thomas Josseline's brother, an antiquary in the archbishop's house, who wrote the history De Antiquitate Britannicæ Ecclesiæ†.

The Chronicle C is called by Joscelin not only "Chronicon Abbendoniæ," but also "MS. Boyer." This is explained by Mr. Hardy as follows:—"Before it became the property of Sir Robert Cotton it belonged to Bowyer, who was keeper of the Records in the Tower."

With the revival of literature English History came to be composed on a larger scale, and the list of books which Holinshed prefixes to his History of England is an illustration that research was now pushing its way back into antiquity, although the necessity of reaching the highest sources was not yet perceived. It was reserved for John Milton to lead his countrymen back to the originals of their early history, by being the first to publish a history of the Saxon period derived from the Saxon Chronicles. In exploring the Saxon literature he had the guidance of his friend Junius, the famous Anglo-Saxon scholar and editor of Cædmon; and who appears from his collations to have contemplated editing the Chronicles. But there was already a published edition, and Milton was the first historian that had the benefit of a printed Saxon Chronicle. Abraham Wheloc, Professor of Arabic at Cambridge, had published it in 1643, under the title of Chronologia Anglo-Saxonica, at the end of his edition of Beda's Historia Ecclesiastica (folio). He used the manuscripts A, which he calls the Bennett MS., and A (G), which he calls the Cotton MS. It was from this latter that he took his text, probably because he found it rather the easier to understand. The variations were added from A. tion is now all the more prized since its principal has been almost consumed by fire, and consequently the print has assumed the place of an original. The three imperfect leaves which have been saved, are evidence of the fidelity of Wheloc's edition, and establish his text as a true representative of A (G). But his translation exhibits mistakes such as might be expected in the first revival of the old Englise historical literature. Thus in 894 (p. 91 of this Ed.) buton swipe gewaldenum dæle (except a very considerable division) is translated "exceptâ validâ Wallensium parte," and printed "buton swibe Gewealdenum dæle." In the same annal (p. 93) sio laf (the remnant) is made a man's name of: "Tum Laf de East-Anglis et Northymbris magnum exercitum ante hiemem coegit." In 897 it is said that Alfred had long ships built, shapen neither on the Frisic nor on the Danish model, but just as he himself thought most likely to be useful—nawder ne on Fresisc gescæpene, ne on Denise, &c., which Wheloc renders, "neque inter Fresones neque Danos fabricabantur." In 937 he bespeaks the consideration of the reader: "Idioma hic et ad annum 942 et 975 perantiquum et horridum Lectoris candorem et diligentiam desiderat." In 962, mancwealm an epidemic and manbryne a conflagration, with the aggravatory prefix man (Germ. mein as in meineib), are translated as if the first syllable were man = homo; "Eodemque anno permagna erat mortalium lues; mortaliumque magna Londini inflammatio." In 975, ofer ganotes bæð (over the gannet's bath, i.e. over the sea) is rendered "per Ganotæ diluvium." Wheloc did not know of the qualities of this oceanic bird, the gannet, which from its great powers of flight can traverse vast tracts of sea or land in a short time, and which being met with very far from its usual haunts, would readily commend itself as an emblem of the sea to the seafaring mind of our ancestors.*

Gerard Langbaine (who died Provost of Queen's College in 1658) had been preparing an edition at Oxford, but when Wheloc's appeared he relinquished it. Wheloc's was a tolerable performance for his day, but Gibson's Edition in 1692 was a great improvement on it. The Title is Chronicon Saxonicum ex MSS. Codicibus nunc primum integrum edidit ac Latinum fecit Edmundus Gibson A. B. è Collegio Regina. It was at the instance of John Mill, the laborious author of the Exemplar Millianum, that Gibson was moved to undertake this work, and to do his best to produce a complete His friend Mill had urged him, he says: Esse nimirum Annales istos augustissimum plané Antiquitatis monumentum, ac quale frustra apud gentes vicinas quæsiveris; fontem ipsum è quo hausta sunt et ad quem exigenda, quæ de rebus istorum temporum tradunt Florentius aliique Chronicon hoc mirificè prædicare, posteriores Historici. ejusque editionem Cantabrigiensi multò auctiorem et quidem omnibus numeris suis absolutam flagitare eruditos. Gibson was greatly helped by the opportune publication of Hickes's Saxon Grammar, which enabled him to gain a firmer hold on this ancient language. He had also the great advantage of applying to Hickes himself in every difficulty. The consequence was that his Edition, if not quite as perfect as his ambition designed, was a great advance upon Wheloc's, and altogether an admirable work. His Latin version is in general not only correct but happy. Substantially it has been the basis of all later versions, although there are a certain number of passages which he did not understand. His text was based upon E with modifications from A, B (through a paper-transcript in the Bodleian), F and G. He considered it his business to construct a text by collation of these authorities, just as if he had been editing a Classical Author. He produced this edition at the early age of 23, and thus laid the solid foundation of that knowledge of English antiquity for which his name is still celebrated. In working on the Saxon Chronicle he acquired that interest in and admiration for Camden's Britannia, which led him next to translate and enlarge it.

From Gibson's Saxon-Latin Edition an English translation was made by Miss Gurney, and printed anonymously. When her work was far advanced, she learnt that Dr. Ingram's Edition was expected, and consequently she desisted from the idea of publication, and took only a limited impression for circu-To this highly endowed and lation among her friends. benevolent lady, however, belongs the honour of having first printed an English translation of the Saxon Chronicle. It was entitled, A Literal Translation of the Saxon Chronicle: Norwich, 1819. This is not a mere Englishing of Gibson's Latin, but a work which displays knowledge of the original. I have referred to it in the Notes on 871 and 896; in the latter case as giving the only real translation of the passage that has appeared up to the present day. In 905 the passage "betwuh dicum and Wusan &c." is thus illustrated with the translator's local knowledge of East Anglia: "and he laid waste their land between the Dyke (the Devil's Ditch) and the Ouse as far northward as the fens." The last clause in 1003, "ferde bær he wiste his yohengestas," (went where he wist his sea-horses were,) had been given up by Gibson with the exclamation, Hujusce clausulæ quis sit sensus me om-Miss Gurney translated it partly right, only nino latet. she carried the poetical metaphor too far: "and thither he carried the irprovender to his horses of the sea, [his plunder to the ships]." In 1137 the word "horderwycan" was given up by Gibson: but Miss Gurney rendered it "treasurer's house," which, though only partly right, has never been bettered by any translator except Mr. Stevenson.

Dr. Ingram's Edition appeared in 1823, furnished with a variety of apparatus, and an English Translation parallel to the Saxon.

Dr. Ingram's praise consists in this, that he added to his Edition the yet unedited matter of the three important chronicles, BCD. In his Preface he spoke of the Saxon Chronicle in the following grandiloquent terms: "Philosophically considered, this ancient record is the second great phenomenon in the history of mankind. For, if we except the sacred annals of the Jews, contained in the several books of the Old Testament, there is no other work extant, ancient or modern, which exhibits at one view a regular and chronological panorama of a PBOPLE, described in rapid succession by different writers, through so many ages, in their own vernacular LANGUAGE."

This is a passage of which it would be as difficult to dispute the sentiment, as to defend the diction. The meaning is plain, viz. that putting aside the Hebrew annals, there is not anywhere known a series of early vernacular history This appears to be comparable with the Saxon Chronicles. no more than the sober truth, and undeserving of the derision which Mr. George P. Marsh, in his Origin and History of the English Language (1862), has visited Dr. Ingram's expressions with. It is to be regretted that an author who has treated the latter part of his subject with knowledge and ability, should have thought it necessary to deal with a period which he has not studied. He has quoted as "fair specimens" of the Saxon Chronicle the annals 449, 473, 509, 616, 671, 793; and after conferring some faint praise on 755, he sums up,-" But taking the Chronicle as a whole, I know not where else to find a series of annals which is so barren of all human interest, and for all purposes of real history so worthless." (p. 105.) Mr. Marsh has failed to perceive that there might be more in the Saxon Chronicles than met his eye at the first glance.

In the year 1830 there appeared a volume entitled Ancient History, English and French, exemplified in a Regular Dissection of the Saxon Chronicle. In this work a spirited attempt was made to assign each section of the Chronicles to its true author—but there was too much arbitrary assertion and too little historical argument in this Essay. Had the author joined the requisite patience and delay to his talent for insight into antiquity, he might have cleared up some of the obscure passages of Saxon times.

In the year 1848 appeared the folio volume entitled Monumenta Historica Britannica, which was intended to be the first of a Series of the ancient Historians of this Realm; undertaken in pursuance of an Address presented to the Crown by the House of Commons in 1822. That plan has not been continued, but an octavo Series has been substituted for it. This splendid volume contains the Historians down to 1066, and among others the Saxon Chronicles, so far as that date, where they are broken off. The text is partly on the syncretistic and partly on the parallel plan, according to the degrees of harmony or divergence between the MSS. in each It had been prepared with great diligence and care by Mr. Petrie, and was completed and edited by Mr. Duffus An English translation is given parallel to the original. The collection of readings at the foot of the page offers to the eye a comprehensive view of the varieties of orthography which characterize the several manuscripts.

In the year 1853 a Complete Translation of the Chronicles was published by the Rev. Joseph Stevenson, Vicar of Leighton Buzzard, in a Series entitled Church Historians of England (Seeleys). This Translation consisted of the Version in the Monumenta Historica Britannica (which Mr. Stevenson adopted by permission) as far as 1066; and a new or revised Version of his own down to 1154. On the whole, this appears to be the best Translation which has hitherto appeared.

The Master of the Rolls gave us in 1861, by the editorship of Mr. Thorpe, a complete Edition of the six manuscript texts in parallel columns. The seventh authority (G) was not admitted in the text of Wheloc, but only the small fragments of it which are preserved in three imperfect leaves of the original manuscript. It may be doubted whether the parallel scheme properly admits so much correction as the editor has supplied,—whether for instance it would not have been more true to the plan, if the annals of B had been left undated where they have been so left in the original—but it would be ungracious in the extreme to detract from the value of a book which must be allowed to be one of the greatest boons that could have been conferred on the Saxon student.

While critics and translators have been at work on the texts, the labour of the historian has been supplied by able hands, so that the Saxon period has been at length thoroughly restored to modern history. In the Histories of Sharon Turner (1799–1805), of Sir Francis Palgrave (1832), of Lappenberg (1834), and the various works of the late Mr. Kemble, the treasures of Saxon History have been explored and are now placed within reach of all.

The present Edition of the Chronicles presents to the student the two texts which are most remarkable in themselves and most worthy of being set together in contrast, together with characteristic parts of the other texts, so as to supply a comprehensive view of the whole series without the omission of any important feature. In the Notes an attempt has been made to clear away some of the obscurities which still remain: and the Glossarial Index has been made as perfect as possible, in order both to open up the text and to take the measure of the Saxon historical vocabulary.

In conclusion, I have to thank many friends who have given me occasional help and information in the course of the work—but in particular I must name two, the late Archdeacon Hardwick, Fellow of S. Catharine's Hall, Cambridge, who compared my printed text of A with the MS., and the Rev. F. Harrison, Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford, who gave me important help at a time when I was disabled by an accident in the eye.

I have also to acknowledge the kind and hospitable manner in which the Master and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, enabled me to collate their valuable manuscript (A), not without trouble and contrivance on their part to observe the stringent rules by which their manuscript stores are guarded, and at the same time to prevent them from being an obstacle or inconvenience to me.

⁶ forlet his here abidan mid Scottum] legiones in hiberna dimisit. Beda. An odd mistake, but quite explained by the fact that many copies had hibernia or (the difference being in MS. little or none) hiberniam. Smith's Ed. first restored the true reading.

- 1 This is the Chronology of Eusebius, founded on the numbers in the patriarchal genealogies according to the Septuagint. For once, the teaching of the great master is rejected. Beda preferred the authority of the Hebrew text, as Jerome had done, but so far from gaining followers, he was almost called a heretic for questioning the established opinion. Eusebii Chronicon, (Venetiis 1818,) pp. 66, 149. Browne's Ordo Sæclorum, p. 334.

2 uncafscipe, ignavia, neglect, sloth. The simple adjective caf is very rare in Anglo-Saxon, and in the other Gothic dialects almost if not quite lost. In the A. S. poets it is found once, Helen 56, cafe to cease, alacres ad pugnam, where see Grimm's note. Diefenbach (Gothisches Wörterbuch) would give it a distant connection with the widely branched root owio, vivus, quick.

- d By a little scraping and patching a has converted the simple proce of A into the more pompous form, and him weer's til-od best he bed. The compound burn teom looked strange in Norman times, and it may be doubted whether it lived beyond the age of Ælfred. It occurs twice in the A.S. Beda (Ed. Smith), p. 642, 30; 647, 2. (Bosw.) In Orosius vi. 1 (ad fin.) the participle Suruhtogen.
- This looks as if culled from the A. S. text of Beda i. 5, where the style is very majestic. . . . and hit begyrde and gefæstnade mid dice and mid corpwealle fram sæ to sæ fram oþrum elreordigum Neodum.

3 It is hard to fix the idea of bred. It seems to represent Beda's duxit, he led or drew a line of wall. And this agrees with the use of the preterite breid a little later, as in Layamon. But the context suggests rather the ancient associations of oferbregdan, breed, Andrew 1307, 1541, where Grimm renders superstrusit, induxit, texis.

There is a third phase of the word, brudan, to open, spread, extend. Thus of the expansion of birds' pinions, Cod. Ex. 289, 13, wineless guma. gesihö him beforan. fealwe wegas. babian brim fuglas. brudan febra. The upper work was a palisade. this chain of relations stretches from weordan at one end, to wyrre (guerre, war) at the other, the question is, where our word joints in? Very likely it combines the two ideas, 1. inhabitants, 2. possessors, guardians, sentinels, warders. Graff has wartari, custos, speculator, from warten = weardian. Yet the data equally suit the sense of shepherds, keepers of cattle: cf. Graff. v. Fihuwart.

this genealogy is (imperfectly) erased by a, in order to make room for matter more interesting to himself. His substituted text is here given in interlined Italics. The same has been the case with the genealogical part of 560, 626: cf. 565, 603, 604.

The dates in the text answer to Feb. 16 and June 20. Where records tally so nearly with scientific calculations, one discrepancy may well pass for an error.

- ² Instead of Oswine Edwines, there is only Oswines in E, but the correction is obvious on comparison of 634 and 650. In Florence, An. 645, Oswine is called regis Edwini patruelis Osrici filius, which is one with the corrected text. The A. S. makes English by inversion of the order: Oswine, son of Osric the son of the uncle of Edwine. The Latin says, Oswine, son of king Edwine's first cousin. 3 The parallel is here dislocated, by an enlargement of the Laud MS., all its own. It consists of the first two instalments of a monograph on the Abbey of Peterborough, which is subsequently continued in parts, under the proper dates. This is a leading feature of E, and stamps it as a Peterborough Edition of the Chronicle.

It was (in a literary sense) a great mistake to embody in a national work so disproportionate a mass of local history: yet, through this very deformity of structure, new sources are opened for the illustration of the Chronicle. The very clumsiness of the performance, as it renders the evidence more palpable, enhances the value of the information that may be gathered from it.

With this digression we drop suddenly into a lower stage of the language. The same style recurs only with the continuations of the same subject, until towards the close of the first handwriting, A. D. 1121.

Thus, the insertions on the one hand, and the first pause in the work on the other, echo the same sound, and mutually determine each other's date. Hence we know, that the change of handwriting at 1121 is no delusive token, that the penman brought his history close up to the time of writing, and that the insertions now before us belong definitely to the same literary effort which produced (not merely this Edition but even) this particular MS. of the Chronicle.

The result is, that we have in E, an unaltered specimen of English of a known date. As this appertains to a period in which such illustration is rare, we must hall it as a real contribution to the history of our language.

The following are some of the peculiar characteristics of the passage before us, and of the era which produced it.

- 1. The vowel e is on the increase. All vowels, certain diphthongs, and even some final consonantal syllables, are apt to fade away into this negligent and languid sound. Thus, we have § e instead of a (or even ia) in infinitive terminations, as, arwurden, wurdminten, areren, wunen, faren, gebidden, finden, wurdigen, læden, standen: in other parts of speech, as, toforen, beonen, leoue, here, luuen, brobre, swustre, obre godene manne, ealre halgane, andswerode: § instead of se, in areren, red, hwere, del, mel, lered: § instead of -um, -an, o, y, ea, eo, in begue, hæge, gare, betahten, wrohten, alesednesse, gef, werce, &c. This prevalence of e is the most universal feature of the Transition from the ancient inflected to the modern uninflected language.
- 2. At the same time e itself is often substituted by eo: less often, eo occupies the place of a former y. E. g. heorotogas, feostnode, steode, seonde, geseond, feorde, heot, seotte, heorda, seox.
- 3. In the general confusion so takes the place of ea, and (exceptionally) of e, eo: e.g. werro, elle, hæge, æst, hældan; þægne, wæl, wæx.
 - 4. The character a no longer represents the full and pure vowel-sound which had entitled it to the first place in the gamut of letters: it begins to appear interchangeably with several of the less perfect vowels and diphthongs. Where the more usual is ea, in al, gare, halfe, gehalden: or se, as in togadere, lawed, gaö: or e, as in festnia, heorda, halgane.

5. The letter u is frequently put for f, e.g. siluer, loue, haue, gauen, luuede, luuen, leoue, æuestlice, Dereuorde, Cliwe, gawle (=gafole).

6. The g initial or final is changed to i in some few cases: interward, ietten, ani, dæi. This became very general afterwards, and y rather than i came to be employed for the substitute; hence a great many of the y's in modern English are the representatives of a Saxon g.

7. But much as these innovations alter the complexion of a Language, their chief value lies in their connexion with the great change of the 12th century, the abolition of grammatical inflexions. Of this movement we see tokens in the interpolations of E. Gender, number, case, the governments of prepositions and of verbs, are in such confusion as to embarrass instead of aiding the operations of Speech; there was no remedy but to sweep them all away.

On the nether edge of the leaf, in the MS., is written in a hand of the 13th century;

4 Here the parallel is disturbed a second time, by the third article on Peterborough Minster. Like the two former, it is cemented to the Annal by the phrase On his time. The Language is of the same stamp as before; and the following remarks are in continuation of the note at p. 29.

Passing from letters to words, we see the old habits of Gender, Number, Case, falling out of rule, or dropping off altogether. The Article is particularly sensitive, and exhibits every phase of the prevailing perturbation. We meet with see kyning; ba kyning; see mynstre; seo ærcebiscop; *p ilce forgiuenesse; se gife; Pl. se muneces; of bone muneca. But we also find be mynstre, and here the germ of order is already seen in the appearance of that impassive monosyllable, which soon levelled all distinctions of a degenerate Accidence, and concentrated in itself the once divided functions of the Definite Article. In this the English made a step, which even French has not yet come up to.

Verbs and Prepositions no longer command their wonted Cases. E. g. nama hit gauen Medeshamstede—betahten hit þa an munec—of þ abbodrice—be se ærcebiscopes ræd—to seo foren sprecone Noro burh. In these instances the Nominative stands where the old classic Englisc would have had the Dative. This Case went first; the Accusative stood longer, and the Genitive has partially remained to our own day. In the Text, an Accusative often fills the place of the old Dative; e. g. geafon and getton bone abbot—ext bone stede—to foran bone ercebiscop. An Accusative even stands for the Nominative; swa micel swa bone abbot wile: and a Nominative instead of the Accusative; Ic Agatho...grete wel seo... kyning!

Of the variety of Declensions little new remains; a single letter (s) forms the Plural of Nouns, and likewise their Genitive Singular. Hence we find the Genitives gifes; Kyneburges and Kyneswičes; and the Plurals, sunes, heorotogas, landes: all in violation of the ancient Grammar.

Akin to the above, is the frequent rejection of the prefix ge before the past participle, and some substantives which it usually accompanied. Thus we find, faren, coren, sprecon, wroht, and the substantive writ instead of gewrit.

But this decay of an ancient Grammar only makes way for the bursting forth of a young system which fills, and more than fills, the room of its predecessor. An elaborate Accidence is picturesque to the fancy, but to the operations of the mind it is hampering. One necessity of form begets another. Where the noun must be in a certain case, it will probably be found necessary to give the clause a particular shape, and that again will have its effect on the cast of the entire sentence. It has been a great advantage to us that the Transition took place when it did, and that it was so complete. Here we gained a march on the cognate dialects. German and Dutch. Let any one try to imagine the great works of English Literature couched in an inflected Language. In so strait a garment, they could never have attained the ease and expansion for which they are so distinguished. Even this raw composition of the 12th century shews a sense of new freedom, as it marches along regardless of the forms of words, minding only their sensible worth and lucid collocation.

9 The fifth piece of the records of Peterborough Minster. It is two old documents; the first a Lease of Abbey Lands, the second an instrument of affiliation.

The historian has his originals before him; he divests them of their technicalities, and gives them a more familiar form. So it was with the earlier parts also: for we may sometimes discern in them the fragmentary traces of an older form, though we know nothing of it from any other source. There is a document in existence concerning the gift of Ceadwala in 686, but it is spurious. It may be seen in Mr. Kemble's great work, the Codex Diplomaticus Ævi Saxonici (No. 40). But the present insertion may be compared with extant originals; Cod. Dipl. Nos. 165, 168. The former identifies itself completely with the text, and forms an excellent illus-

e These Walas or West Walas are the men of Cornwall. So 710, 823. They are called CornWalas, 891,997E. The Gothic folks gave the name Walas to strange races on all sides, to the Celts in Gaul and Britain, and to those who spoke the Roman dialects in the South. The Saxons called the natives of Gaul, Gal Walas: of Britain, Bret Walas; those north of the Bristol Channel, NorhWalas (922), now WALES; those of Strathclyde, Stræcled Walas (875, 924). The Old High German calls the Latin Language, or any of its dialects, Walahisoa; and the designation still lives in Germ. Wälsch. In Mid High German it was used as equivalent to not-German, as, in allen Welschen und in Tiutschen richen (Ziemann M. H. D. Wört.) = in all the world. Hence wal-nut, Germ. wallnuss = foreign nut. A. S. wealh, wylen. Cf. Graff. v. Walah.

In the mythological stage, B.C.D. go higher than X; all up to Sceaf, the mysterious ancestor of fabled kings. This remote progenitor appears in the Beowulf, but only as the patronym of Scyld, the oldest personage of whom any doings are there related. The Longobards preserved the name of Sceaf at the head of their traditions, as may be gathered from the Traveller's Song, line 64. For further information cf. Kemble's Preface to his Beowulf, vol. ii.

f This pedigree outruns all others in the Chronicle. It is rare to mount higher than Woden, the divine father of kings. In 547 we are carried up to Geat, which is quite transcendental. But here, the lineage strains after the loftiest attainable elevation, quitting the mythological for the Scriptural genealogy, and from the summit of the latter soaring away into the region beyond.

4 The national force is called flerd, fyrd; and the invading armament is here. The latter word probably meant at first a body of men, a band; and this unprejudiced sense still lives in the Germ. Heer. But in A. S. it contracted the bad notion of a troop; viz. that of waste, pillage, buccaneering. Hence the words, hergian, hergung, to harry, &c. In the Laws of King Ine it has a criminal sense, and is numerically defined. If more than 35 persons band together, it is here: from 7 up to that number it is only hlos: 7 or less are merely thieves.

The flerd was the national militia, embodied in each shire under the eald-orman: so called from their marching off on service (faran); in Latin named expeditio. No property in the country was exempt from the obligation to send its contingent to the fyrd.

The "Isle of Princes" was formed and fortified by the stagnate waters of the Tone and Parrot at their junction. Hence the maxima gronnia paludosissima et intransmeabilia of Asser. It is now drained and cultivated, and known as Athelney Farm, in the Parish of Stoke St. Gregory, east of the line of rail from Bridgewater to Taunton, and about seven miles distant from each of those places. In the year 1603 the celebrated "Alfred jewel" was found in Newton Park, somewhat north of this spot. It is deposited in the Ashmolean Museum in Oxford, and it has often been figured and described in books. The legend upon it gives a point to the locality of the discovery, and invests the object itself with an interest beyond all other extant monuments of Saxon Art. It says: XELFRED MEC HEHT GE WYRCAN.

When the Language had no distinct Relative Pronoun except the indeclinable be, oblique cases were made out by a contrivance which is usual in Hebrew, viz. the addition of the Personal Pronoun in the case required.

Thus be . . . his = whose

be . . . hyra = quorum.

A more succinct Relative Pronoun was at length obtained, by the gradual employment of a word which had hitherto been known only as an Interrogative. Such is the history of our present Interrogative and Relative Pronoun who: up to about the year 1200 it had only the function of questioning, but in the early part of the 13th century it acquired the position of a declinable Relative. The two texts of Lajamon illustrate this fact very well, instances of Who-Relative occurring in the later text, but (?) not in the earlier.

3 fæstenne B. fæstene C. D. fenne T. A. F. fænne E.

Though four of the MSS. have fenne (fænne) against three that exhibit fæstenne (fæstene): yet from the context, and from the evidence of the Latin historians, there can be no doubt that the latter is the true reading. The Editors of the Mon. Hist. Brit. restored it to the text, and it may be regarded as established. Æthelwerd says: in Limneo portu constituunt puppes, Apoldre loco condicto, orientali Cantise parte; destruuntque ibi prisco opere castrum, propter quod rustica manus exigua quippe intrinsecus erat. Florence thus: quamdam arcem semistructam, quam pauci inhabitabant villani, diruerunt; aliamque sibi firmiorem in loco qui dicitur Apultreo, construxerunt.

n rade B. rad D. contra pedestrem exercitum Flor. This was an important battle, and by it the kingdom of Arnolph was rid of the devastators. It was fought on the river Dyle, near Louvain, Septr. 1. 891: a day long afterwards kept up in memory of the victory. Cf. Lappenberg, vol. i. p. 341.

In the next year they had to flee before the famine which their own ravages had caused, and they fell back on those western provinces which were under the sway of less doughty warriors than Arnolph. Guided by Hasting, a viking of great renown, they burst upon England like a storm,—the last which agitated the eventful life of Alfred.

The concerted invasion, and the promptness of the king to meet the foe wherever his dominion was assailed, are here told in a narrative which has all the freshness and reality of contemporary writing.

c At Colchester, Edward "repaired and restored the fortress wheresoever it had a breach." No mention of new constructions as elsewhere (gewyrcan ane burg), for the fortifications date from Roman times. It seems to be established now that Colchester is the R. Colony of Camulodunum (Tac. An. xiv. 31), which was surprised and stormed by the infuriated Boadices, A. D. 61. See "The Military Antiquities of the Romans in Britain" by Maj. Gen. Roy, p. 187, and "Colchester Castle" by Rev. H. Jenkins. Quarterly Review, No. 193.

The walls, of which particular mention is made on the previous page, form a parallelogram, longer on the north and south sides; measuring about 1½ m. round. According to Maj. Gen. Roy, they are based on a Roman vallum, and the whole position is such as the Romans would choose—a commauding point of land, formed by the Colne on one side and a ravine on the other.

Such being the strength of the place, it was a spirited act of the men of Kent, Surrey, and Essex to dislodge the Danes, and recover a stronghold of so much importance. In this we see the good effect of the king's vigorous conduct upon the temper and resolution of his people.

d Æthelflæd, the Lady of Mercia, died at Tamworth, which seems (from the language of some Charters) to have been the Residence of the kings of Mercia.

Æthelflæd had governed with more than feminine energy; she had humbled the Welsh, and fortified her territory against the Danes. The Latin Chroniclers make a point of giving her masculine titles, as Henry of Huntingdon says: Hæc igitur domina tantæ potentiæ fertur fuisse, ut a quibusdam non solum domina vel regina, sed etiam Rex vocaretur ad laudem et excellentiam mirificationis sui, &c. So D. has, mid rihte hlaford dome.

Holinshed styles her "the martial ladie and manlie Eifieda." Speed calls her "another Zenobia."

On the death of his sister, Eadweard occupied Mercia, and united it finally with Wessex. A line drawn from the mouth of the Mersey to that of the Welland, with a free outward curve, would now describe the Saxon frontier towards the Briton and the Dane.

This national song of victory is a fine sample of the genius and art of Saxon poetry, and a noble memorial of the life of our forefathers. Much of the Chronicle has the merit (too rare in Saxon prose) of being genuine and homespun, free from the intrusion of strange ideas, and the infection of foreign models. But these verses shew us the native spirit in its more excited mood; they speak the tumultuous joy of brave and simple patriots with the rage of battle still tingling in their veins. Such glowing words could not become extinct: they have scored themselves indelibly on the tablet of

Gibson appreciated the poetry, though in his day the sense had not been perfectly made out. He notes: "Idioma hic et ad An. 942 et 975 perantiquum et horridum, inquit Whelocus. Perantiquum proculdubio, horridum interim haud dicendum; quippe quod stylum Cædmonianum, elegantissimum plane, et in quo Ducum res gestæ ob ejus sublimitatem decantari antiquitus sole-bant, aliquatenus saltem referat."

The song is preserved in five out of the seven MSS.; viz., X. A. B. C. D. The later Chronicles E and F omit it: under Norman rule it had no longer any interest. Of the Latin historians Henry of Huntingdon alone has embodied this gem into his work. His version has many happy renderings, and likewise many curious mistakes, speciously paraphrased. For the sake of ready comparison it is appended here; the more glaring faults being printed in Italics.

'Rex Adelstan, decus ducum, nobilibus torquium dator, et frater eius Edmundus, longa stirpis serie splendentes, percusserunt in bello, acie gladii apud Brunesburh. Scutorum muros fiderunt, nobiles ceciderunt, domesticæ reliquize defuncti Edwardi. Sic namque iis ingenitum fuerat a genibus cognationum, ut bellis frequentibus ab infestis nationibus defenderent patrize thesauros et domos, pecunias et xenia. Gens vero Hibernensium, et puppium habitatores, fatales corruerunt; colles resonuerunt. Sudaverunt armati, ex quo sol mane prodiit, micans hilariter, latificans profunda, Dei luminare, fax Creatoris, usque quo idem nobilis ductor occasu se occuluit. Ibi viri jacuerunt multi a Dacia oriundi, telis perforati, sub scutis lanceati, simul et Scotti bello fatigati. Gens vero Westsexe, tota simul die, prius electi, post indefessi, invisæ gentis globos straverunt; viri elegantes, hastas cædebant, viri Mercenses acuta jacula mittebant, duro manus ludo. Sanitas ibi nulla his qui cum Anlavo trans maris campos in ligni gremio terram petierunt, Marte morituri. Quinque occubuerunt in loco belli reges juvenes, gladiis percussi, ducesque septem regis Anlavi; absque numero ceciderunt Scotti, deperiitque Normannorum tumor. Nec enim paucos ad litem belli, duxerant secum: cum paucis vero in maris fluctus rex navi provectus, intrinsecus gemebat. Simul et Froda ductor Normannus, cumque suis notis dux Constantinus, de Martis congressu, jactare nequierunt, ubi cognationis suse fragmen apparuit, ubi amici sui corruerant, in statione populi bello prostrati, et filium suum in loco prœlii vulneribus demolitum carum reliquit. Nec Gude Dacus, declamare potuit, licet verbis blandus, et mente vetustus. Nec Anlaf ipse, cum reliquiis suis, mentiri potuit, quod ad hoc negotium sui præstiterint in campo belli, ictuum immanitate, telorum transforatione, in concilio proborum. Matres vero et nurus planxerunt suos belli alea cum Edwardi filiis lusisse; cum Normanni, navibus clavatis, et Anlaf tabefactus, ultra profundum flumen, terras suas, mœsto animo, repetissent. Postea frater uterque rediit Westsexe, belli reliquias post se deserentes, carnes virorum in escam paratas. Ergo corvus niger, ore cornutus, et buffo livens, aquila cum milvo, canis lupusque mixtus colore, his sunt deliciis diu recreati. Non fuit bellum hac in tellure majus patratum, nec cædes tanta præcessit istam, postquam huc venerunt, trans mare latum, Saxones et Angli, Brittones pulsuri: clari Martis fabri, Walenses vicerunt, reges fugaverunt, regna susceperunt.'

This Ode has been often done into English, and it has been the work of many hands to smooth its difficulties for the modern student. See Guest's History of English Rhythms, vol. ii; and the improved Ed. (1840) of Price's Warton's Hist, Engl. Poetry, vol. i; where is a rich collection of notes and illustrations.

In Ellis's Specimens of Early English Poets is a 'metrical version' in the style of the 14th century, which Conybears (Illustrations of Anglo Saxon Poetry, p. lxxxi) praises as a successful imitation.

A faint echo of its sense comes back to us from the region of British Legend, as represented in the verses of Lazamon. It is in the reign of Æbelstan that the story of British nationality is brought to its plaintive close, when their wandering prince is taught in a dream to cease his vain attempts against the power of the Saxon, and to wait the promised day foretold by their prophet Merlin.

Eadmund had much ado to secure his inheritance. The Danes made a new effort to escape from the yoke of Wessex. They called over ANLAF of Ireland, the discomfited champion of Brunanburh, to be their deliverer and their king. Eadmund was defeated at Tamworth, but he besieged his enemy in Leicester. Through the two Abps (of whom each side had one) a peace was made, which confined Eadmund South of Watling Street, and made ANLAF king of all the North. But the death of ANLAF soon enabled Eadmund to recover his lost dominion, and to take a firmer hold on those outlying dependencies. Then were the Five Burghs reduced to submission, and the two 'kinglets' of the North were awed into the profession of Christianity. This done, they reigned awhile, Anlaf Sihtricson in the North division, and Regnald Guöferőson in the South district of which York was the capital.

1 This, No. 8. of the Peterborough Record, contains the Revival of that Abbey, after a long eclipse. No. 7. told of its ruin by the Danes, An. 870, the year in which they slew "Edmund King and Martyr," and in the period when their ravages were most extensive and desolating. All the Religious establishments North of the Thames perished; and before a time of renewal came about, their lands had found other proprietors. But Abelwold, Bishop of Winchester, succeeded in reviving the old foundation of Medeshamstede, and in recovering its ancient possessions, immunities, and privileges.

Important writings, we are told, were found in the old wall. This is enough to set criticism on the alert as to the soundness of the antecedent history.

But here a new chapter opens. The éclat of the present movement, and the ensuing prosperity of Burch, are well described by Gunton (Hist. of the Church of Peterb, 1686):

"The Monastery thus re-edified, King Edgar desirous to see it went thither, with Dunstane then Archbishop of Canterbury, and Oswald Archbishop of York, attended also with most of the Nobility and Clergy of England. who all approved and applauded both the place and work. But when King Edgar heard that some Charters and Writings, which some Monks had secured from the fury of the Danes, were found, he desired to see them, and having read the priviledges of this place, that he had a second Rome within his own kingdom, he wept for joy: And in the presence of that Assembly he confirmed their former priviledges and possessions; the King, Nobles, and Clergy offering large oblations, some of lands, some of gold and silver. At this glorious assembly the name of the place was changed from Medeshamsted to Burgh; and by reason of the fair building, pleasant situstion, large priviledges, rich possessions, plenty of gold and silver, which this Monastery was endowed withal, there was an addition to the name, as to be called Gildenburgh, though in reference to the dedication it hath ever since been known by the name of Peterburgh."

he dyde peah to swide b he ælbeodige un sida lufode. and hædene beawas innan bysan lande gebrohte to fæste. and ut lændisce hider in tihte. and deoriende leoda be speon to bysan earde. God him ge unne † his gode dæda swyðran weardan bonne misdæda, his sawle to gescyldnesse on langsuman syde."

2 "These lands and all the others which belong to the minster do I declare to be a shire; viz., (with) Sac and Soon, Toll and Team, and Infangenthef. These rights and all others grant I to be the shire of Christ and St. Peter." The Latin charter is given in Dugdale (No. ix) and in Cod. Dipl. No. 575, where it is marked by Mr. Kemble as spurious. The passage which corresponds to the above stands thus: "Sint ergo tam istæ villæ quam ceterse omnes quæ ad ipsum monasterium pertinet, cum universis rebus et rationibus suis, et totum quod appellatur Saca et Socne, ab omni regali jure et ab omni seculari jugo in æternum liberæ, et in magnis et in minimis, in silvis campis pascuis pratis paludibus venationibus, omnimodis mercationibus, theloneis, omnium rerum procurationibus Dei beneficio provenienti-These terms convey to the Abbot and Monks a complete territo. rial jurisdiction within their extensive domains. Not only were they to enjoy that independence of episcopal authority which religious houses commonly had; but further, there was to be no Ealdorman or scirgerefa (scirreue in the text, sheriff) exercising jurisdiction within their bounds.

The business of the scyr was transacted in the scyrgemot, held twice a year; and it was presided over jointly by the Bishop and the Ealdorman. According to the terms of this document, no Bishop or Ealdorman could sit within the Royalty of Burch; the Abbot and his Society would have the power all in their own hands. The Latin copy has the following near the close: "Hanc igitur totius Abbatise tam in longinquis quam proximis possessionibus regificam libertatem ab omnibus approbatam, excepta modo rata expeditione et pontis arcisve restauratione, satagimus per ipsum devotissimum hujus descriptionis auctorem Athelwoldum à sede apostolica Romanæ ecclesiæ, juxta primitivam ejusdem monasterii institutionem, per-petuò corroborare." It is remarkable in connection with this claim, that in the Latin Chronicle of Peterborough (Ed. Sparke), one of the many descendants of this Chronicle, Saxulf the first Abbot is styled Comes at the opening of the work. This title comprehended (at the date of the writer) all the temporal rights here specified; and looks like an attempt to ground them upon hereditary proprietorship.

On the constitution of the scir there is a chapter in Kemble's "Saxons in England" (book i. c. 3) which contains much rare information. On the terms Sac and Socu, Toll and Team, and Infangenthef, cf. Intr. to Cod. Dipl. p. xlv.

Cum autem venisset Cantuariam, statim cogitare cœpit quomodo possit eicere clericos de ecclesia Christi, quos Ceolnothus pro tali necessitate compulsus ibi posuit. Primo igitur anno ordinationis suæ tanta mortalitas facta est in ecclesia Christi, ut de tota congregatione monachorum non remanerent nisi quinque. Qua de causa quia ita subito non potuit invenire tot monachos qui ibi servitium Dei facere possent, ex simplicitate cordis præcepit capellanis clericis suis, ut essent cum eis usque quo Deus pacificaret terram, quæ tunc nimis erat turbata propter nimias tempestates bellorum. etiam de villis suis presbiteros, ut essent cum monachis, ita tamen ut monachi semper haberent dominatum super clericos. idem archiepiscopus et sæpe suis dixit, quia statim cum Deus pacem nobis dederit, aut isti clerici monachi fient, aut ego ubicumque monachos inveniam quos reponam. Scit enim Deus inquid, quod aliter facere non possum. Sed nunquam temporibus suis pax fuit in Anglia, et ideo remanserunt clerici cum monachis, nec ullo tempore fuit ecclesia sine monachis. Sed nec iste Æ8eredus archiepiscopus potuit facerc.

III.—This is a little Mercian Register of a period of twenty years, and may be styled "The Annals of E pelfæd." It was unskilfully jointed into B and C after date, and so stands out conspicuous and isolated from the midst of the surrounding compilation. But the compiler of MS. D made selections from this piece, and mingled them with materials from other sources, digesting the compound into chronological order. So that we have here the opportunity of contemplating a portion of our history both in its earlier isolated and in its later compiled aspect.

The MSS. B and C, after closing the year 915 (918 A), fetch back to 902, and introduce the present episode, which may be considered to close at 921. Barren from 921 to 924, they here fall in again with the usual current of history, and relate the death of Eadweard (A 925), but in a manner of their own. Both are then vacant for ten years, and to exhibit their poverty at this point, the extract has been continued two annals beyond the termination of the Mercian Register or Annals of Epelfæd.

The text is from C, and at the foot are given the variations of B.

prenitentes suæ pertinaciæ, ad Lanfrancum miserunt, et ei omnem obedientiam promiserunt. Quibus continuo pepercit, mandans ut redirent, et professionem suam præfato Abbati se servaturos sacramento confirmarent. Itaque redierunt, et se deinceps fore fideles, et obedientes Widoni Abbati super corpus beati Augustini juraverunt. Qui vero remanserant cepit Lanfrancus, et per Ecclesias Angliæ divisit; constrinxit, donec eos obedientiam profiteri coëgit. Circa idem tempus Æluredum unum ex illis vagantem fugiendo cepit, et Cantuariæ in sede metropoli, cum quibusdam sociis illius, qui Abbati malum moliti sunt, ferro compeditos, multis diebus rigorem ordinis in claustro discere fecit: sed postquam sufficienter humiliati sunt, ut æstimatum est, et emendationem promiserunt, misertus eorum Lanfrancus de singulis locis, quo eos disperserat, præcepit reduci; et suo Abbati reconciliari.

Eodem anno, dissentione reiterata, perniciem Abbati clam machinati sunt; et dum unus ex eis, nomine Columbanus, deprehensus fuisset, jussit eum Lanfrancus sibi adduci. Cumque coram eo astaret, interrogavit si Abbatem uoluisset perimere. Qui confestim, Si, inquit, potuissem, pro certo eum interfecissem. Præcepit itaque Lanfrancus, ut ante portas beati Augustini, spectante populo, ligaretur nudus, flagellis afficeretur: deinde præciso capitio, ab urbe pelleretur. Factum est ut imperavit, et ex hoc, inquietudinem cæterorum, donec vixit, sua formidine quassavit.

Nono decimo anno, defunctus est Lanfrancus venerabilis Archiepiscopus, et sepultus est in sede Metropoli Cantuariæ; qui in sede Pontificali sedit annis decem et octo mensibus ix duobus diebus. De cujus actibus, ædificiis, eleemosynis, laboribus, scriptura quæ in ejus anniversario legitur ex parte commemorat. Multa enim erant valde. Post ejus obitum, Monachi S. Augustini, præfato Abbati suo Widoni palam resistentes, cives Cantuariæ contra eum concitaverunt; qui illum armata manu in sua domo interimere tentaverunt. Cujus familia cum resisteret, pluribus utrinque vulneratis, et quibusdam interfectis, vix Abbas inter manus illorum illæsus evasit; et ad matrem Ecclesiam, quærendo auxilium, Cantuariam fugit. Hujus facti fama citati suffraganei ejusdem Ecclesiæ, Walkelmus Wentanus et Gundulfus Rofensis Epi-scopi, Cantuariam, cum quibusdam nobilibus, quos miserat Rex, veniunt: ut tantæ offensæ vindictam adhibeant. Auditis ergo rationibus seditionis. Monachi à culpa excusari non poterant: quos coram populo subire disciplinam, quia palam peccaverant, ii qui advenerant, decreverunt: sed Prior, et Monachi Ecclesiæ Christi, pietate moti restiterunt; ne si palam punirentur infames deinceps fierent; sicque eorum vita ac servitus contemneretur. Igitur concessum est, ut in Ecclesia fieret, ubi non populus, sed soli ad hoc electi admitterentur. Vocati sunt ad hoc Monachi Ecclesiæ Christi, Wido videlicet, et Normannus, qui disciplinam ad Episcoporum imperium intulerunt. Deinde divisi sunt per Ecclesias Angliæ, et loco illorum xxiv Monachi Ecclesiæ Christi admissi, cum Priore nomine Antonio, qui Sub-prioratus officio Cantuariæ fungebatur. Cives vero, qui Abbatis curiam armata manu intraverant, capti; et qui se ab ejus impugnatione purgare non poterant, oculos amiserunt.

Post obitum Lanfranci caruit Ecclesia Christi Pastore quatuor annis mensibus ix et diebus ix in quibus multa adversa perpessa est. Anno vero Dominicæ incarnationis mxciii datus est Pontificatus Cantuarberiæ Anselmo Beccensi Abbati, ii Non. Martii, viro probo, bono, apprime erudito, et sui temporis nominatissimo. Venit autem Cantuariam vii kal. Octob. multis eum causis rationabilibus detinentibus, quod prius venire nolebat; et sacratus est ii Non. Decemb.

NOTES

- p 2 l. Wesseaxna] This is the form which survives in the name of Wessex. The form without the t occurs in many places in A and its earlier successors; but never in E. E. g. p 4: A. D. 560, 611, 643, 650, 670, 827, 836. In 855, C exhibits the archaic form, where A has the t. It has been questioned whether Wes- had the same meaning as the later West-; and this doubt would apply also to the parallel case of the Visigoths = Westgoths. Forstemann, Ortsnamen, p 133, treats the identity as certain, and produces Visula and Bisula as acknowledged forms of the river-name Vistula, which river he supposes was once the western boundary of the Gothic tribes.
- P3 t. gebeode] gebeodu D. This word means, not nations or peoples, but languages. The translators have been misled by the sequel, which goes on to speak of them as peoples; following Beda in rough epitome. The Latin of fif gebeode is quinque gentium linguis. Gens, natio is beod, but gebeod is the national language: cf. Matth. i. 23. on ure gebeode=in our speech. As beod was thus affected by the prefix ge-, so by the suffix -isc: beodisc=language, both in A. S. (Boeth. 19) and in the continental dialects; whence Theotiscus, Tedesco, Deutsch, Dutch.

Among the five languages used in Britain, Beda enumerated Latin. A glance at his text will shew that this would be included quite naturally from his point of view, which was to enumerate the languages used in this island in the services of religion. In D, the list stands unaltered; but E, who did not go to the original, but copied from (such as) D, not catching the idea, tried to make five languages in the common secular sense, and therefore he resolved the Bryt Wylse of D into two, Brittise and Wilse. The sense which he attached to this distinction was Welsh and Cornish. See 835 and foot-note. We find Wales called Brytland in 1063, 1086 (p 222). This alteration of E was followed by F.

Book-Latin is the usual but inapt rendering of Boo-Leden. Book-language would be a truer equivalent. Already, before the date of D, had the word Leden attained that 'Common-Noun' state, in which it equalled language in general, or a strange, mysterious, learned language in particular; and from which it was able to form its derivative Latimer=an interpreter. See Genesis xi. 6. Dis is an folc and ealle hig sprecas an Lyden=This is one folk and they all speak one language. The determinative Boo-would not have been prefixed, so long as Leden was regarded as a Proper Name. In Chaucer, Squier's Tale, it is used of the discourse of birds,

- p 3 h. Soithiam] Meaning Scandinavia, or as it is expressed in Smith's note in Beda i. 1. "Scythiam citeriorem." The tendency to transform names into those of classical celebrity is seen just above, where Armenia stands for Armorica.
- p 3 l. Scotta sum dæl gewat of Ybernian on Brittene] = Some of the Scots emigrated from Hibernia into Britain. And that emigration proved the cause of transferring the national name. The name of Scotland appears to date from the eleventh century; previously it was 'Albania.' In the Saxon Chronicles we find earlier mention of the 'Scots' in the north of Britain, as at 684, 937; but we do not find 'Scotland' until 1066 (p 201). The 'Scots' in 891 are plainly those in Hibernia.
- p 3 b. Reoda from þam heo sind genemnode Dæl Reodi] The Irish authorities give a different account of this name. They say that British Dalrieda (a kingdom comprehending a large part of South-Western Scotland, namely, Argyle, Kantire, &c., founded by an Irish colony A. D. 503) was named from the territory of Dalrieda in Antrim, because its chiefs were from the Irish Dalrieda.

It was probably the Dalriedan king who gave Iona to Columbkille, and not the Picts, as stated by Beda. King's Hist. of Irish Church vol. i. p 85, referring to Lanigan ii. 159.

425 E. A Latin Chronicle, apparently Frankish, of which we have had instalments above, is incorporated from time to time. Faramundus in Frankish story is the traditional name of the founder of the monarchy. His personality was doubted by De Thou; and Sorel (La Bibliothèque Françoise, Paris, 1667, p 373) went so far as to say: "On est fort peu asseuré si Pharamond fut jamais au monde." Buckle, Civilization, p 705.

Patricius]

- 430 A. Palladius] This mistaken correction by the interpolator a, was probably borrowed from some MS. like E, the only one that reads Patricius. It is the only notice of S. Patrick in the Saxon Chronicles. As to Palladius and Patricius, see some annals of Marianus in Monumenta Historica Britannica, p523 foot. Also Nennius c. 55 and 56. The earliest authority is said to be Prosper, who was a contemporary of Palladius and Patricius. The date given for the preaching of S. Patrick is 431, the year after the mission of Palladius. The proximity of the dates, and the comparative obscurity of Palladius, led to the substitution of S. Patrick in his place. Prosperi Chronicon apud H. Canisium. Lect. Ant. vol. i. p 301. Ed. Basnage.
- 457 A. Creegan ford] In margin of C is written in an Elizabethan hand: nunc creyford non longe a dartford—and at top of page, partly cut away in binding: Crea fl intrat [?] dartford, ejusque fons est ad orpyngton, super eam sunt seint Mary crey, powles crey, north crey, beckesley & creaforde. This and some other notes, (chiefly topographical) in C, may possibly belong to the collection of material for Camden's Britannia; but the handwriting is unknown. See Introduction, description of C. Infra 477, 491, 577, 591, 648, 673, 679, 685, 752, 763, 822, 874, 875, 878, 880, 893, 894 (p 93).
- 477 A. Cissa] ab hoc Cissa puto Chichester dictam Cissanceast' C marg.: cf. note on 457 A.
- 477. Cymenes ora] Camden and, after him, Gibson say this place must have been near Wittering on the coast of Sussex. They rely on a Charter which Kemble (Cod. Dipl. 992) has marked as spurious, but which was no doubt constructed with a regard for probability. In it this name occurs as Cumeneshora, a form which countenances Ingram's guess that Shoreham is the place; quasi Cymeneshoreham.
- 491 K. Andredes cester] Hæc (ut puto) ab hoc Cissa post dicta est Cissanceaster C marg. In Cod. Dipl. 1094 there is a Cissan beach. The site of Andredes ceaster is discussed in Archæol. Journal, vol. iv. p 203; and decided in favour of Pevensey.
- 508. Natan leod] This is equivalent to Naiton Rex (Pictorum Beda v. 21) or Nectanus Rex in Annals of Tighernac 717 (Ann. Ulster 716). There is also a Nechtain Ann. Ulst. 709. The indices to the Irish Annalists will give sundry others in the seventh and eighth centuries. This name Natan, Naiton, Nechtain was evidently a name frequently borne by Keltic princes. It entered also into names of places: Dunnichen near Forfar is identified with the Duin Nechtain of Tighernac 686 quoted below, note on 685 E. The word lead is identical with clwydd or llwyd=prince; which is seen in the Welsh compound Arglwydd=Lord: and which is so well known as a family name of Welsh extraction Lloyd. See Garnett's Philological Essays, p 329.

I copy from Mr. Hawker, Vicar of Morwenstow, the following Cornish illustration of this name: "In a rocky Glen, midway between the Castles of Bottreaun and Dundagel, there is a Fall of Waters into a hollow Cauldron of native Stone, which has borne for Ten Centuries the Name of St. Nectan's Kieve. He was the brother of St. Morwenna, and like her a famous Saint of this Northern Shore. He founded the Stations of Hartland and Wellcombe; and bequeathed his Name to other Sacred Places along the Sea, in the Former Ages of Cornish Faith." The Quest of the Sangraal. Exeter 1864. Appendix A.

Since the above was written I am glad to discover from a note on p 56 of Mr. Pearson's Early and Middle Ages of England, that Dr. Guest has already given this sense to lead in Philolog. Trans. vol. i. No. 2. He translates Natan-lead, king of the Nattas.

- 534. There was in the time of Edward the Elder, a barrow at Stoke near Hurstbourne (Hants) known as Ceardices beorg, the hill or (?) barrow of Cerdic. Cod. Dipl. 1077. For this remark I am indebted to an article in the Archæological Journal, July 1857—a posthumous paper of Mr. Kemble, who has rendered such services to our early literature and history by his Translation of Beowulf and other works; but above all by the invaluable store of materials he has brought together in the Codex Diplomaticus Ævi Saxonici.
- 556. Beran byrg] Probably Barbury Camp between Swindon and Marlborough. "This is a large camp, in excellent preservation. It is nearly circular, and girdled by a double ring of ditch and rampart; the inner very strong, sloping full 50 feet to the bottom of the ditch." Murray's Hand Book, Wilts.
- 577. This Annal with that of 584 record two important steps in the advance of the West Saxons upon the British population, bringing our accestors, according to Dr. Guest, along the Severn valley, so far as Faddiley (Feþan leag) on the confines of the Vale Royal of Cheshire.

Deorham, where the battle of 577 was fought, by which the important triangle of Gloucester—Circncester—Bath became Saxon, is identified with Dyrham, on the turnpike-road between Bath and Gloucester. In Domesday it is written Dirham; and Gibson (Glos. ad Sax. Chr. sub voc.) says it was called Durham in his day.

Commail, Condidan, Farinmail may have been (as suggested by Dr. Guest) the princes of those three cities, and they may have made a stand at Deorham with their combined forces, against the aggressive Saxon.

M. de la Villemarquè has adopted the view of Sharon Turner, identifying Condidan with Kyndylan son of Kyndruyn, whose fall in the Saxon invasions is the theme of a celebrated Welsh Elegy by the cotemporary bard, Llywarch Hen. Dr. Guest, who makes that Elegy apply to 584, contends that this view is faulty, because Kyndylan in the Elegy is slain near Shrewsbury, whereas Condidan in the Chronicle falls at Deorham. But it is a curious coincidence, that among Kyndylan's companions in arms in the Elegy, there figures conspicuously Garanmael son of Kyndylan. Goreu gwr Garanmael: Bravest hero Garanmael. See Les Bardes Bretons du vie Siècle, par M. de la Villemarquè, pp 66, 107.

The 'many towns' and 'countless spoil' of 584 come out very well under the theory of Dr. Guest. For if Fepanleag is in Cheshire, the expedition passes through Powys-land, of which the capital was Pengwern (Shrewsbury). Of this district M. de la Villemarquè says: "Powis, ce paradis des Cambriens...... ce pays de la poésie et de la renommée"—referring to the expressions of the Welsh bards. That the desolation of Uriconium may with high probability be referred to these invasions, has been shewn in a very convincing manner by Dr. Guest in the Paper so often referred to (Archæological Journal, No. 75: On the English Conquest of the Severn Valley); a remarkable example of approach to certainty in the twilight scenes of our early history.

These Annals, so distinctly original, were hardly penned before the events were on the verge of oblivion—therefore, if a transposition of names or other slight adjustment seems to be required by the Welsh remains, historical criticism could not object. The Saxons had arms, and the Britons arts.

- 577. Cirenceaster] cyceter C marg.: cf. note on 457 A. Gibson in his Glos. to Sax. Chron. spells it Ciceter.
- 591. Woddes beorge] Wodebryg' in Suthfolk from Ipswych v myle C marg. Again 715. Gibson says: Hodie Wodnesburh in agro Wiltun. Viculus fossæ cuidam admirandæ adsidens, quæ Wodnesdic appellatur, et totam eam regionem transversa intersecat. E has set Wodnesbeorge.
 - 603 A. set Ægesan stane] The readings set Egisan stane BC---

- set Desgsan stane (E)—at Degstane (a)—are pretty clearly identical in origin. The D form is according to Beda i. 34, in loce celeberrimo qui dicitur Degsastan id est Degsa lapis. So it would seem as if in the resolution of coherent dentals the D was lost, and hence the form in TBC. Gibson says: Dawston (Cumberland)—Ingram conj. Theekstone (Yorks. N. R.).
- 633. Heòfelda] Hatfield (with Hatfield Moor, Hatfield Chace) in West Riding of Yorkshire: cf. Beda ii. 20, Smith's note; Gough's Camden, vol. iii. p 273.
- 641 E. Maserfeld] This place is matter for conjecture. Smith (Beda iii. 9 note) produces a place of the same name in Lancashire. Gibson fixes it at Oswestry (Oswaldestre) because this name has Oswald in it. Ingram guesses Mirfield, Yorkshire West Riding.
- 643. þa ciricean] þa ealdan cyricean BC. For the importance of this insertion see the description of MS. B in the Introduction. In F it stands: Description het getimbrian hymposter on Wintanceastre on Sce Petres naman.
- 648. Æsces dune] Aschedown foresta yn Suthesexe C marg.: cf. note 457 A.

There are three other mentions of this same place, and all very significant. In 661, Wulfhere king of Mercia carries his ravages as far as this—in 871, Ædered and Ælfred fight with the whole Danish army on this down-and in 1006, we have the Danes passing from the neighbourhood of Wallingford "along Ashdown;" and we next find them at East Kennett, not far from Marlborough. Æscesdun is clearly that mass of chalk-hills between Wallingford and Marlborough, on which is the famous white horse of Berkshire, and on which a private residence, Ashdown Park near Uffington, preserves the ancient name. Here it was that king Cenwalh gave a large tract of country to his cousin Cuthred; probably with a view to make the position secure against the Mercians. It is remarkable that 661, when Wulfhere advanced to Æscesdun, is the year of Cuthred's death. Perhaps he fell defending his territory. Cuthred's father Cwichelm was also famous in those parts, for "Cwichelm's low" was somewhere near Ashdown (1006). Cf. Cod. Dipl. 603.

- 652 E. Pendan] An error of the scribe for "Peadan."
- 653 E. est Icanhoe] est ycean ho' BC; on Icanho F. Gibson supposes this place to be Boston in Lincolnshire, quasi Botulfeston.
- 654. for pan pet ver is an weel] Smith on Beda iv. 6 disputes this derivation à fonte voraginoso, and explains the name as Locus habitationis in pratis.

656. p 30t: wed broweres This relationship, whatever it was, must be understood as between Peada and Oswi-not Wulfhere and Oswi. The Northumbrian victory of 654 had broken the power of Mercia, and made it dependent on Northumbria. Peada ruled by Northumbrian favour, and as having a Northumbrian princess for his consort. It is the family alliance and pledged brotherhood between Peada and his father-in-law Oswiu that is represented in the word wedbroteres: whether the writer of this slovenly interpolation so understood it or not. In Beda iii. 24 fin. it is said that Oswiu gave Peada the government of South Mercia eo quod esset cognatus suus. There was a double marriage between the families: Peada married Alchfied daughter of Oswiu, and Alchfrid son of Oswiu married Cyneburg sister of Peada. Yet we must not understand wed- by its modern association with marriage: but simply as signifying that a covenanted alliance existed between the parties, which made them bound to stand by each other like (or even more than) natural brothers.

Sir Frederic Madden (Lazamon, vol. iii. p 354) has adopted the more usual explanation of this passage, brother by baptism.

656. p 30 h. for hwi] The Demonstrative to this Interrogative is for bi; e. g. p 256 t.

656. p 33 h. peonest men] This appears like the Danish tjeneste = service; which also compounds with a noun of the person who serves, as, Tjeneste-dreng = serving-boy: Tjeneste-folk = serving-folk: Tjeneste-mö or Tjenste-pige = serving-girl: Tjeneste-qvinde = serving-woman. Molbech v. Tjeneste.

656. p 33 m. undyde] irritum redderet: disannul. It is not usual to find undon in this sense of καταλύειν, εξουθενείν, άθετείν: its prevalent use is that of opening what is shut, as below in the same page, of S. Peter with his keys undoing, opening the doors of heaven. Infra 1122, of the phenomenon of a cloud seeming to burst open, and divide into four parts (se wolcne undide on fower healfe). In Fragments of S. Swiöhun, p 6. line 17, þa eagan undyde=opened his eyes. In Ælfric's Homilies, vol. i. p 548, undyde his muð (=opened his mouth); otherwise expressed in the same page "geopenode his muð."

658. æt Peonnum] "Pen, an obscure village now, but antiently famous, being ordained by destinie as it may seeme to the overthrow both of Britans and Danes. For at this verie place Keniwalch a West Saxon, had such a day of the Britans, that they would scarsely ever after abide to come into the field against the English Saxons. And many a yeare after that, king Edmund surnamed Ironside, gave there a notable foil to the Danes, as he pursued Canutus their king."

This is Penglewood, or Penscellwood, i. e. Pen-Selwood, or head of Selwood, (locally pronounced Zilw'd,) on the confines of Wiltshire, Somersetshire, and Dorsetshire. The place is famous for the "Pen Pits," which are said to be the vestiges of an ancient British town. In the neighbourhood there is an earthen fortress of large area, known as "Keniwilkins's Castle"—a name which bears a strong resemblance to that of Cenwalh.

664. Wagele] This passage is from Beda (iii. 27), but the name of Tuda's burial-place is so different here from that which is found in the text of Beda, that it becomes a topographical question belonging to the Saxon Chronicles. In the Eccl. Hist. it is Pagnalsch: in the Anglo-Saxon version it is Peginaleah. Smith, the editor of Beda, thinks the similarity of name is enough to identify it with Pincanheal (now Finchale two miles from Durham), where a Synod was held in 788. Ingram, who brings forward another form of the word, Vegnalech, from Leland Bed. Collect. ii. 143. ed. 1774. conjectures that it is Whalley, or as he otherwise writes it (I know not whether upon authority or by way of etymology) Wayleigh. This Whalley is an extensive parish, lying in three counties, Lancashire, Cheshire, and Yorkshire, containing several towns, chapelries, and townships, with a fine Abbey Church—so that it is not unlikely to have been of ancient celebrity. But the identification of Wagele must after all be left to the local antiquarian.

675. p 38 h. hwile abbot be hwile man swa]=what abbot soever what man soever, &c.

675. p 38 l. ge redd] read, published by reading. For the sake of any reader who may not be familiar enough with his mother-tongue to perceive the comparative modernness of this and such like late insertions, this word is selected as a palpable illustration. Nowhere in the elder Chronicles will this verb be found in the modern sense of ἀναγινώσκω, legere. Rædan is to plan, counsel, advise; e.g. p 157, where the same participle ge red means resolved upon.

675. p 381. Al swa ic beode be Saxulf, &c.] And as on the one hand I ordain unto thee that (according as thou desirest) the minster be free—so on the other hand do I forbid thee and all the bishops that come after thee in the name of Christ and of all His Saints that ye have no claim on the minster but according to the Abbot's will. This pretension would appear to be set up as early as 65% (p 33 l), but the expression is not so distinct there as here. In this place the language is so distinct that no doubt can remain about the anachronism. The first real case of exemption of an English monastery from episcopal jurisdiction appears to have been that of Battle Abbey. Hallam's Middle Ages, vol. ii. p 165 note. - 685 A. Ecgferh cyning mon ofslog] E adds be norsan sæ. The commencement of his expedition against the Scotti is noticed in 684 E. The battle in which he fell is called the battle of Dunnichen, and is thus recorded in the mixed language of the Annals of Tighernac:—686. Cath Duin Nechtain [i.e. The battle of Duin Nechtain] xx die m. Maii Sabbati die factum est, in quo Ecfrit mc Ossu [i.e. Ecgfer's son of Oswiu] Rex Saxonum, xv anno regni sui, consumata magna cum caterva militum suorum interfectus est la Brudhi mc Bili Rege Fortrein [i.e. by Bruide son of Bili king of Fortren].

 - 685 E. Agust'] For Hagustaldesham (as above) or Hexham.

Ceastre] This means York. So again 762. Many places were locally called Ceaster; but with the progress of centralization it became necessary to keep up their distinctive prefixes, as Winchester, Manchester, &c. Only one great place has come to be known by the simple name of Chester; with obscure places such as Caistor, Castor, &c., it was more easy, and probably there are several of them in existence.

688 E. under Cristes clasum] Rex verò secundum votum infra only in D. This is the Drycthelmus of Beda v. 12; a Northumbrian thane of Incuneningum (prob. Cuningham) who died in the evening and woke to life in the morning, and remembered what ke had seen in the other world, while out of the body. The narrative of his vision was long used in church teaching, and Wanley notice in his Catalogue five different volumes in which homilies or narratives of Drihthelm's vision are extant. Dr. Ingram (Appendix to Sax. Chron.) has pointed out that Dryhthelm's remains were deposited at Melrose according to Hugo Candidus (ap. Sparke, p40)—and also that the wonderful vision of Charles le Gros, related by Malmesbury, Gesta Regum Angl. lib. ii, was probably founded on Dryhthelm's.

See more in the Latin version in Cod. Dipl. 996; and, with some variations, in Spelman, vol. i. p 189. After the place where F leaves off, Spelman's version continues thus: "Hoc præceptum statuimus hiis monasteriis quorum nomina hæc sunt annotata. 710. Gerente Weals cininge] The name Gerent recurs in British history. In this place it is that Gerent king of West Wales (i.e. Devon and Cornwall) to whom Aldhelm, when Abbot of Malmsbury, addressed a letter or treatise (librum egregium adversus errorem Brittonum Bed. v. 18) about conformity to the Roman Ritual. Titled thus: Domino gloriosissimo, occidentalis regni sceptra gubernanti, quem ego, ut mihi Scrutator cordis et rerum Testis est, fraterna caritate amplector, Geruntio Regi, simulque cunctis Dei Sacerdotibus per Domnonia conversantibus, Aldhelmus, sine meritorum prærogativa Abbatis officio functus, optabilem in Domino salutem! Aldhelmi Opp. Ed. Giles, p 83.

We know of an earlier Gerent, also connected with Devonshire, through an elegy upon his death by Llywarch Hen. It is the first in M. de la Villemarquè's Bardes Bretons; and is entitled, Maronel Gerent Mab Erbin=Elegy of Gerent son of Erbin. This Gerent is almost of the times and cycle of Arthur: though M. de la Villemarquè would vindicate him for history by identifying him with the "swipe sepelne monnan" who fell fighting the Saxons; above 501.

Mr. Pearson, Early and Middle Ages of England, p 35 note, says the mythical Vortigern is a transformation of that Gerontius, a native of Briton, who transferred the diadem from the usurper Constantine to the head of his friend Maximus.

Gerrans in Cornwall is connected with 'king Gerennius' by a very distinct and circumstantial tradition. On the highest ground in 'Roseland,' overlooking Gerrans Bay, is Veryan Beacon, or (in the Ordnance Map) Carne Beacon, a tumulus of the first magnitude. Tradition calls it the tomb of king Gerennius, who lived in a palace on yonder side of the bay, and his corpse was rowed across in a golden boat with silver oars, which were all buried along with him. This mound was opened in 1853 by the Rev. John Adams [Newdigate Prize-man 1847], the Hon. and Rev. J. T. Boscawen, and others: and a Report which appeared in the Cornwall Gazette, written by Mr. Adams, ought to be enshrined in some less ephemeral publication. The effect of the opening was to establish the sepulchral character of the Beacon; for after some days' excavation, they reached a kist-vaen of massive unhewn rocks, fit for the resting-place of a king. All within had mouldered to dust. Mr. Adams assigns a date to this interment, from a place in the Register of Llandaff, which says that S. Teilo on his way homeward from Brittany (whither he had retired during the prevalence of the ictericia pestis) visited Gerennius king of Cornwall, and attended his death-bed. The date of this event is A. D. 506 (Stubbs, p 156).

7:6 A. pa ciriclecan scare] the ecclesiastical tonsure, as ABC; or Sancte Petres scere, S. Peter's tonsure, as DEF: cf. 737 E, 757 E. 722. Tantun] Comparing this with 658 we measure the westward progress of Saxon dominion. Taunton was now its most advanced station. The Tone here passes through the gate of the country, as the Thames does at Reading. Taunton commanded the narrow plain between the Quantocks and the Wellington Pillar Heights. In the Somersetshire Archæological and Natural History Society's Proceedings for 1853 is an excellent paper on the position, history, and present condition of Taunton Castle, with a plan and illustrations, by the Rev. F. Warre. It was placed in the angle made by a small stream flowing into the Tone.

728 A. Ine ferde to Rome] In a highly demonstrative epistle from Gregory II. to Leo the Iconoclast, quoted in Gibbon, c. 49, the Roman bishop makes a diplomatic use of the zeal and submissiveness of the converted barbarians of the West; and there is room to imagine (as the historian has done in a note) that this pilgrimage by king Ine was in the writer's mind.

731. Ceolwulf was king of Northumbria when Beda died; it was to him that he had dedicated his Ecclesiastical History (see foot-note supra, p 52): in the last chapter of which he left a sentence of gloomy foreboding as to the future prospects of his country. His foresight was justified by events, as may be seen by the divisions and crimes and instability marked in the Northumbrian Annals 757, 759, 774, 778, 789, 790, 794: cf. note on 705.

The turn of Mercia comes next: hitherto its conflicts had been with Northumbria, but now we see it expanding and becoming aggressive in the direction of Wessex (733); taxing Cuöræd's efforts (741,752); in alliance with Cuþræd against the Welsh (743); fighting against Kent (773), and under the dread king Offa wresting Bensington from Wessex (777), who extorts from the Abp. of Canterbury a cession of part of the primacy, to render Mercia ecclesiastically independent (785); orders the king of E. Anglia to be put to death (792), and throws up "Offa's Dyke" (Asser). Under Ceolwulf they overrun Kent (796), and continue to hold the leadership in Britain till the close of the century. But from the accession of Ecgberht (800), the power of Wessex begins to aim at the position which it ultimately attained.

752 A. Beorg feorda] Burford C marg : cf. 457 note.

755. In this circumstantial narrative the reader should bear in mind the arrangements of a Saxon residence. The chief building was the hall, around which grouped the other apartments, each entered from the court; the whole surrounded by a wall or rampart of earth, and therefore named a burh. The common external entrance was the gate (geat), which was an opening in the wall; but the entrance to any of the enclosed buildings was a door (durs). The description in this Annal seems to imply that the residence at Merton covered a considerable area.

The king was in the lady's chamber (bur—the 'bower' of mediaval romance), and Cyneheard surprised him there (hime ber berad) by riding in unexpectedly through the outer gate into the court, before the king's attendants, who had retired to the hall, were aware (er hine ba men onfunden be mid bam cyninge wærun). Then the fight between the king and his foe takes place at the door (duru) of the lady's bower, and there the king was slain. And now the lady's screams had, for the first time, alarmed the king's guard in the hall. They hasted to the rescue, scorned Cyneheard's proposals, and fought till all but one were slain. Next morning the rest of the king's party came up, and found Cvneheard in occupation, and in a posture of defence (bone abeling on bare byrig metton). His party had closed the outer gates (ba gatu), and meant to defend them. After a fruitless parley, they fought about the gates (ymb ba gatu) till the party inside was obliged to yield. See Mr. Wright's very interesting work, "Domestic Manners and Sentiments," p 13.

755. pone bur utan beeode] pa burh utan ymbeodan B; pa burh utan beeodan C; pone bur utan beeodon D.

755. p 50 t. on bees wifes gebeerum] by the woman's cries. So gebeerum Oros. iv. 10. § 2; Ed. Bosw. Psalm xxxiv. 15. In these two instances it might be questioned whether 'gestures' or 'cries' were the sense. In Oros. i. 12. § 1. wifa gebæra is vague. In our text it is clearly 'cries;' and so Sir F. Madden renders it in Glos. Lazamon v. ibere.

The use of the preposition on in an instrumental sense was widely spread, and is still in extensive provincial use. The expression 'along of' is but a modification of the genuine 'along on' to convey cause or occasion. Thus Chaucer (Canones Yemannes Tale):

I cannot tell wheren it was along, But wel I wet gret strif is us among.

755. p 50 h. alle lægon] all lay, i. e. were corpses. No later inventions of human language have rendered death with more expression, than that which was the most obvious and probably the very oldest—the motionless prostration as of a felled tree. This thought produced πτῶμα and cadaver. In Job xiv. 10. it is put forward prominently, but our version has overlooked it. Renan: Mais quand l'homme meurt, il reste étendu. De Wette: Aber der Mann, stirbt er, so liegt er da. Compare Zosimas in Appendix to Swiöhun, p 110. l 7, þæt mægn þæs liegendan.

And as liogan = to lie, is used for the state of death; so leogan, transitive, to lay or fell, is used of slaying; like occidere and occidere. See Schmid, Gesetze Glos. v. leogan.

755. p 50 m. hiera agenne dóm] their own terms.

-755. p50 l. object hie beer inne fulgon] until they penetrated, or forced an entrance. Grein seems to be right in rendering felgan simply intrare. Kemble v. filhan. The word is an obscure one, and perhaps was never in general use: so B avoids it by writing wurdon; and E has recourse to the wild substitute flugon, which is quite out of place.

761 E. Florence says: juxta Clivum Edwini, clitonem quendam nobilissimum Oswinum occidit. Hen. Hunt. is more ample: Mol rex Nordhumbre interfecit Oswine fortissimum ducum suorum, qui committens prælium erga dominum suum apud Eadwinesclive, jure gentium spreto, jure Dei occisus est. Simeon Dun. describes the battle-field as, juxta Eldunum secus Melros. Written Eladunum in Hoveden and Chr. Mailros. This word El with its variants Al, Hel, seem to have designated a height, rock, or mountain. Beda E. H. i. 12. has Alcluith, quod lingua eorum significat petram Cluith. Helvellyn is rendered yellow mountain, on the authority of Dr. Guest, "as Rhiwvelen, that name so common in Welsh topography, meant yellow slope." Archæological Journal, No. 75. p 214.

763. pone seowertegan dæg ofer midne winter] id est Candelmas day C marg.: cf. 457 note.

773. read Cristes meel] Hardly "a fiery crucifix" (MHB); but as Mr. Thorpe, "a red cross." Literally, Cristes meel means the sign or emblem of Christ. Florence has it, Rubicundi coloris sig-num in crucis modum in cælo apparuit post solis occasum. Infra p 123 l, the cross of signature is called by this name.

778 E. heahgerefan] Kemble (Saxons in England, vol. ii. c. 5) thinks these high-reeves were no part of the ordinary machinery of government, but officers occasionally-commissioned with extraordinary powers. Simeon of Durham calls them duces here and in 780. The title occurs again 1001 A (three times), and 1002 E. The only other light we get on the subject is from a little code on Wergilds (Thorpe's Ancient Laws, 8vo. p 186; -fol. p 79. Schmid, Anhang vii) in which the heahgerefa ranks with the hold (having the same wergild); above the thane, but below the bishop and ealdorman. In having a wergild at all, he is, as Schmid remarks, distinguished from other gerefan, who have no wergild as gerefan. In all other cases where gerefa has a prefix, it is a substantive, expressive of the province of his reeveship; e.g. Scirgerefa=reeve of the shire, sheriff; burhgerefa, charged with the maintenance of a fortress (burh); portgerefa, provost of a market-town; wicgerefa, village-reeve; tungerefa, farm-bailiff; swangerefa, supervisor of the swangs or swineherds, and controller of the forest-pasturage.

780 E. p 57. Ælfwold cining sende man] man delendum. As it now stands, it would mean that the king was sent &c. The odd thing is that the error is in D also, so that it may have pervaded several chronicles. Unless perhaps a sense can be found for it, which escapes me?

780. p 57. The Pallium recurs so frequently in our records, and is a symbol of such historical importance, that the following paragraph, dated April 20, 1863, cannot fail to interest the student of these annals:—

"The Archbishop of Paris received the Pallium vesterday from the hand of the Papal Nuncio, in the small church of the Lazarists, in the Rue de Sèvres. The ceremony was comparatively private, though a large body of clergy and several bishops were present. The religious papers tell us that the stuff out of which the Archiepiscopal vestment called the Pallium is manufactured, is made from the wool of ten white lambs, which have received the Apostolic benediction in the church of St. Agnes at Rome, on the day of the festival of that saint. These lambs are afterwards kept in a convent until the shearing-time arrives. The Palliums made from this wool, without any admixture, are then deposited on the tomb of St. Peter, and remain exposed there during the night preceding the fete of that Apostle. The next day they all receive benediction at the altar, and are despatched wherever they are required. The Pallium, in shape, is composed of two woollen bands, about two inches in breadth, which hang suspended down the back and chest." The Guardian, April 22, 1863.

The chief points of interest in the history of the Pall may be readily seen in Dean Hook's Lives of the Archbishops, vol. i. p 27; where the main authorities are given. Originally it was an undefined mark of honour, but at length it acquired a special reference to the exercise of the metropolitan dignity, and as such it was defined in a Canon of the Council of Lateran 1215. The conventional shape of the Pall is seen in the archiepiscopal arms of Canterbury, Armagh, and Dublin.

785. and Ecgfer) to cyninge gehalgod.] Hen. Hunt. says, Eodem anno Egfert sacratus est in regem Kentensis provinciæ. There is no older authority for making Ecgfer) king of Kent: and it may be a confusion on the part of that chronicler with what happened in the dynasty of Wessex in the next century. But still the whole subject of the succession to the throne of Kent becomes at this period so obscure, and the pretensions of Mercia must have grown so absolute by the event of 773, that it would be unsafe to reject Henry's statement, which makes Kent an appanage of Mercia. Moreover, it is to be observed that the elevation of Eadbryht Præn (794) coincides with the death of Offa. The ultimate expulsion of the Mercians from Kent is recorded in 823. If E's reading 'gehalgode' is anything more than a blunder, and we attach any value to it, its meaning would be, that the new Mercian archbishop consecrated the royal candidate.

787. so gerefa] This is the weard or landweard of Beowulf 457. 3777 (Kemble). The incident was clearly a celebrated one at the time and long after: it is thus recorded in the magniloquence of Æthelweard: Regnante Byrhtrico rege piissimo super partes Anglorum occidentales, jam innocentia protensi populi arvis sereno cum tranquillitate dabant squalidis sulco, et oneriferæ boum costæ proximo amore colla jugo subdebant; advecta est subito Danorum ardua non nimia classis, dromones numero tres; ipsa et advectio erat prima. Audito etiam, exactor regis, jam morans in oppido quod Dorceastre nuncupatur, equo insilivit, cum paucis præcurrit ad portum, putans eos magis negotiatores esse quam hostes; et præcipiens eos imperio, ad regiam villam pelli jussit; a quibus ibidem occiditur ipse, et qui cum eo erant: nomen quippe exactoris erat Beaduheard.

Henry of Huntingdon gives it thus: Brichtricus anno regni sui quarto, duxit in uxorem Eadburh filiam regis Offæ Merce: unde comfortatus est in regno et provectus in superbiam. His autem diebus venerunt Daci cum tribus puppibus in Britanniam prædationis causa. Quel præpositus regis illius provinciæ videns, occurrit eis debito securius, ul comprehensos ad regium duceret castrum. Nesciebat autem qui escu qui appulerant, vel cur appulissent. Statim vero immistus eis occus est. Hic primus fuit Anglorum cæsus a Dacis, post quem multa millium ab iisdem cæsa sunt: et hæ puppes primæ fuerunt ques hu Daci adduxerunt.

This gerefa, weard, landweard, exactor regis or præpositus regis, affords an analogy for the office of the much discussed Comes Litera Saxonici.

It appears from the Annales Cambrize, that the south coast of Ireland was likewise visited by the Danish ships this year for the first time: "Primus adventus gentilium apud dextrales ad Hiberniam."

787. be seresten scipu Denisora monna] What these ships were like we may at some future time know better than we do at present. In a recent extraordinary find of antiquities at Nydam Moss in Denmark, there has been discovered a perfect ship, built for oars, 72 feet long and 9 feet in the beam. The planks are of oak, with large iron bolts, and clamps cut out of solid oak. The excavations being followed up under the eye of the late king, Frederick VII, they found another boat 44 feet long, of deal. Roman coins accompanying this find, the latest A. D. 217. For full particulars see the account in Gent. Mag., December 1863, by Professor George Stephens.

790 E. eft feng to rice] Not "proxime capesait regnum" (Gibson); nor merely "succeeded" (Ingram); nor "afterwards succeeded" (Thorpe): but "again obtained" (MHB). He returned to the throne from which he had been expelled (778), four years after his accession (774); where he is called Molles sunu, and here Abelwaldes sunu. His father was Moll Æbelwald (759). See parallel cases in 828, 1046 (p 170). This is the special function of eft, to signify iterum, denuo, rursus, re-, abermal, πάλων or αὐθις. See Dr. White, Gl. Orm. v. Eft. Its general, or base-meaning, is "afterwards;" but this sense almost vanishes in the prose literature.

At the early date of 685 there appears to be a clear case of eft=
"afterwards;" that on p 12, ac hie eft on hie fuhton, is of later date, and "afterwards" is not an adequate rendering. Rather thus:
"but they afterwards turned and fought against them."

In 797, of the two instances, one may be doubtful. In 838, and by ilcan geare eft=and a second time the same year. In 894 (p 91 l), eft-ageaf = restored, gave back without ransom. In 918, and be

797. The history of the case is in Gibbon, c. 49; but this legend is a transfer to Leo of the famous miracle of the African Confessors, which puzzled Gibbon (c. 37), and which Dean Milman (Latin Christianity, vol. i. p 332) calls the one post-apostolic miracle which appears to rest on the strongest evidence. In a note at the end of the volume he quotes a surprising parallel from a recent traveller.

Matth. Westm. (Flores Hist.) has here a very different story about this Leo having cut off his own hand, to avoid a certain contamination, and having originated the practice of kissing the foot instead of the hand of the pope.

800. Cynemæresforda] Kempsford in Gloucestershire; or Commerford in Wiltshire, concerning the claims of which latter place, see Camd. Brit. col. 106. (Stevenson.)

819. Cenwulf Mierona cyning] There is a leaden bulla of this king in the British Museum. It bears on the obverse A COENVVLFI REGIS; and on the reverse AMERCIORVM. (Sir F. Madden, in Archæol. Journal, 1856, p 369.)

822. Clofes hoo] Cleofes hóó C; doctor Hethes benyffyce C marg.: cf. 457 note. See the Chronicles of Abingdon edited by Mr. Stevenson for the Master of the Rolls. Where it appears that the monastery of Abingdon was founded near a town called Seukesham or Seovescham or Sheovesham. The locality is central for Mercia and Wessex. Gibson (Glos. Sax. Chron.) maintains it is Abingdon; and unlike himself, growing warm in his argument, he deems that haud facile samus quispiam.... in hác re hærere possit. Ingram silently, "Cliff at Hoo, Kent." In Cod. Dipl. 1034 the place is written Clobesham. Where may Dr. Hethe's benefice have been?

823. Gafulforda] Hodie (opinor) Camelford in agro Corneliensi, quod oppidum alicubi vocari Gaffelford asserit Camdenss (Gibson). The substitution of F for M appears elsewhere, e.g. Boethius, c. xxxv. § 4: the name of Nimrod or rather Nemrod (Vulg.) is rendered 'Nefrod.' Semington (Wilts) has an alian 'Sevington.' Compare the variations efn- or emn-, stefn or stems.

This seems to have been a check given by the Welsh of Cernyv to the advance of Wessex settlers, who probably designed to push beyond the Tamar by turning it high up—und so wenig verbreiteten sich die Angelsachsen über den Tamarfluss hinaus, dass dieser noch viele Iahrhunderte hindurch eine der merkwürdigsten Sprach- und Volker-Scheiden Europas geblieben ist (Lappenberg).

823. and Cantware him to cyrdon . . . wærun] The established translation of this passage runs thus: "And the men of Kent Surrey, Sussex, and Essex submitted to him (viz. king Ecbryht), for formerly they had been unjustly forced from his kin," (i. e. severed from connection with the Wessex family.) Such a connection is made out by Henry Hunt. in the person of Eadbert Præn, whom he brings into his rendering of this passage-" rex Ecbricht in dominium suscepit quos prius cognatus suus Pren injuste amiserat." one of 'die wichtigen Notizen' peculiar to Henry Hunt., on which Lappenberg here builds; and if it be accepted, all difficulty is obviated. To me it does not bring conviction. MHB emphatically questions Eadberht Pren's kinship to Ecgbriht, "sed de cognatione ejus cum Egberto adhuc quærendum" (p 733). Next it is to be observed that the grammar has to be stretched, and "him to" must be referred to Ecgbriht, over a distance which nothing less than certainty as to the sense could bridge over. In this state of the case, I will venture to propose a new translation which is a little speculative, but which may be worth trying where the old one stands on such dubious ground. "They drove Baldred the king over the Thames; and the Kentish men threw off their allegiance to him, as did Surrey, Sussex, and Essex, on the ground that they had originally been unjustly subdued by his family." The two words on which this great alteration of sense turns, are tocirdon and from. From instead of meaning removal, separation, 'away from;' is here made to be passival, and to mean 'by' of the agent. This use, though archaic and uncommon, is well enough known, and need not be questioned if we can settle the other. It is to cirdon, which I venture to suspect may mean the very opposite of that sense which ordinarily, and not groundlessly, has been assigned to it. The old rendering may be justified by many passages, e.g. Exod. xxxiv. 31, ba clipode he hig. ba cirde Aaron and ba yldestan men to him=Then called he them: then turned Aaron and the rulers to him. Notwithstanding, I think that him to cirde in our text is 'turned from him,' rejected him, cast him off. The 'to' is not the 'to' of adhesion; but the other, which means severance (Lat. dis-, German zer-). See compounds with to- in Glossary. A happy illustration is in E 1094 (p 230 t), 'hi ba mid mycelon unsehte to cyrdon'=cum gravibus inimicitiis discesserunt (Gibson); they parted with great dissension (Stevenson); they separated with great animosity (Thorpe). If my version is right, all the Latin chroniclers are wrong, which on the one hand gives a check to my confidence; but on the other, it would throw a great light on the history of the Language to recover a sense which to Ethelweard and his successors was remote and obscure.

The expression genydde (to which anidde in this place is probably equivalent) occurs repeatedly in Orosius, of forced adhesion, e. g. Book iii. c. ix. § 6. in Ed. Bosworth. "And sissan for on Cilicium, and bæt folc to him genydde; and sissan on Rosum bæt igland, and bæt folc to him genydde. And æfter þam he for on Egypti, and hý to him genydde." Also Book v. c. xii. § 4: and in Book v. c. xv. § 3. we have the inverse; "Germanie gesohton Agustus ungenydde him to frise" = The Germans voluntarily besought the favour of Augustus.

851 A. AND PY ILCAN] These capitals probably represent the national exultation at so novel and promising an event as a navel victory over the vikings. In B it is explicitly said, that they fought is ships—gefuhtan on scipum—and so also C D E, and even F, Æbelstan cing gefeht on scipe agean hæþenæ. Cf. Dean Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, vol. i. p 292.

852 E. græfan] This doubtful word was boldly rendered by Gibson as mineral coal, "duodecim plaustra carbonum fossilium;" and so all the Editors since ('coal,' Ingram, Stevenson; 'pit-coal,' Thorpe), except MHB, where it is prudently left untranslated. We have hardly an indication that this kind of fuel was known in Saxon times. Mr. Wright ("Domestic Manners," p 21) thinks he finds one in the Vocabularies, where col and synder are rendered carbo and scorium. The item reads very well as fuel in association with those before and after it; and a suitable etymology is obvious, as Mr. Stevenson has noted, from grafan, to dig, mine, quarry. But it may be asked, is it likely, if greefa had been once a word in Lincolnshire, Northants, &c., for coal; and if this article had been so well known that Peterborough Abbey received twelve loads of it every year from a single estate; is it likely that this name of a useful commodity would have quickly disappeared? Yet no trace of it is found anywhere.—Another consideration may influence our interpretation. Where should the lessee of Sempringham, as it is now called, in the south of Lincolnshire, procure twelve load of pit-coal? A glance at a geological map shews no coal measures nearer than Derbyshire! I conclude that the pit-coal must be given up, and that greefa was gravel for the annual repair of the dykes, embankments, and roads, so necessary a provision in the Fens. It is quite possible that the wood mentioned before, and the fagots or stakes which come after, may, one or both, have regarded the same service.

We find at a later date the representatives of the Abbey of Peterborough are held responsible for considerable works of this nature, as the following extract will shew. In an Ordnance of the Commission of Sewers for the Fens (A.D. 1616) it stands: "And that the Old Ea being another branch of the river Neene, from Claylake unto Middlehome, hard att Bulldyke End neere Peterborough, shall be roaded and cleansed to the old bottome and antient breadth, and all dames and other stopps therein shall be avoyded and utterly taken away by the Deane and Chapter of Peterborough or theyre tennants." Wells' History of the Bedford Level, vol. ii. p 45.

some definite quantity by weight or measure. Halliwell v. Fother, says 19 cwt. It occurs in Chaucer, Prologue 532, where the reading is not ylaid (Tyrwhitt), but jladde (Bodl. MS. 3360).

NOTES

852 E. mittan] In the Lindisfarne Gospels, sub modio Matt. v. 15, is rendered under mitte vel under sestre; and in Rushworth, under mytte; where in the WS. Gospp. it is under cyfe.

853. domne Leo] This form is found also in the Saxon Beda iii. 14. "min domne bisceop," for the Latin "domine antistes."

855 A. Adam. primus homo et pater noster. est Xps.] In this ascension from Adam to Christ, we have something like the train of thought by which Clemens Alexandrinus (Strom. vi. § vii. p 769) deduces the pedigree of Greek philosophy from Christ as the primæval source. Later philosophers being descendants of Zeno, Aristotle, Epicurus, Socrates,—these of Pythagoras, Pherecydes, Thales,—the parents of these again having been the Egyptians, Indians, Babylonians; the scale at length ascends to the original parents of mankind; and these received all their light from Him that lighteth every man that cometh into the world. Blunt, Early Fathers, p 174.

865. him feoh geheton wit pam frite] See Dean Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, vol. i. p 291. The version of Asser (whose chronology differs by a year) is as follows: Anno dominicæ incarnationis DCCCLXIV Pagani hyemaverunt in insula Tanet, et firmum fædus cum Cantuariis pepigerunt; quibus Cantuarii pecuniam pro fædere servato reddere promiserunt; interea tamen vulpino more Pagani noctu clam castris erumpentes, fædere disrupto, et promissionem pecuniæ spernentes (sciebant enim majorem pecuniam se furtiva præda quam pace adepturos) totam orientalem Cantiæ plagam depopulati sunt.

865. up besteel] It is strange that the force of up should have been overlooked by the classical scholars who have laboured on the Chronicles, since it is exactly like the well-known use of dro for going 'up the country' or inland, from the coast. The enemy was encamped on Thanet, but they stole a raid into the heart of the country. In 901, where the transaction is all inland, the same expression occurs without up: cf. also 876. Other instances are, uppe on londe, 897 (p 95 l); upbecoman=they landed, p 115; up eodon, 998; upgang=an inland expedition, 1009 (p 143): but the most decisive place is in 1046 (1), ægfer ge upganges ge wæteres. Compare Ælfric's Homilies, vol. i. p 312 (Ed. Thorpe); where, speaking of Pharaoh's pursuit of the Israelites into the Red Sea, Dava he com on middan beere see, ha was heet Godes folc upagan = By the time he (Pharaoh) had reached the middle of the sea, the people of God was safe on shore. Also up on lande, id. p 162.

866 A. Æpered] Ævelred E. The form Æpered is constant in There and 868 and elsewhere, not only of this king, but also of the Archbishop Æpered, 888. So also BCD agree with T, and E is the earliest that introduces the form Ævelred. But at 888 all the MSS down to F agree in omitting the l.

867. ungecyndne cyning] See Abp. Trench on "a kindly king," in English Past and Present, p 136. Cf. infra, p 126 h, . . . goda purh gecyndne cræft=naturæ indole bonus (Gibson); and p 222 m, Normandige p land wæs his gecynde=Normandy was his birthright.

867. late on geare] The word late = serd, is a word which the modern English possesses in common with the Low German dialects, where the Hoch Deutsch has spät. At Hamburg, you may hear the boatmen who have been in good time for a chance, call out to those who come up afterwards, that they are 'al to last.'

867. to pam geoirdon peet] they resolved that they would fight &c., MHB; they came to the resolution that &c., Thorpe.

871. wip alno pone here on Æsces dune] This is the Battle of Ashdown which the White Horse of Berkshire is supposed to commemorate.

871 A. Meretune] Merantune B; Meredune D; Meredune E; Merentune F. Gibson says this is generally set down as Merdon (Wilts), meaning the place which is now written Mardon near Devizes—but that others maintain it is Merton 3 m. from Bicester. He commends the enquiry to the attention of local antiquarians. Merton in Surrey, mentioned 755, Gibson does not bring in here. So generic a name is a poor geographical guide.

871. sumor lida] Miss Gurney translated this "summer pestilence" on the authority of Lye; and also because it appeared to be more probable than the astiva quies of Gibson, or the astivus exercites of Æthelweard and Henry of Huntingdon. Mr. Thorpe, Translation of Lappenberg, vol. ii. p 45, pronounces Ethelwerd's version undoubtedly right.' Lappenberg (Geschichte, vol. i. p 312) would correct the text and read sumor liva, i. e. astiva classis. But we find yould for a ship in Beowulf 395. The accompaniments of the root livan=to go, cannot easily be separated off from those which belong to the German verb leiden=to suffer. Diefenbach (Gothisches Wörterbuch, vol. ii. p 131) throws them into one group, and remarks on the abnormal shifting of the dental, and also on the confused intermingling of the two senses, 1. going, 2. suffering, which he is at a loss how to connect, save by the medium-idea of fatigue. He prefers after all to suppose that two distinct roots have run together.

871 A. p. 76. anlipig aldormon] Only in A. In BCDE the adjective is dropped, and the substantive put in the plural. Gibson translates, singulis ducibus. MHB has, single ealdormen. Mr. Thorpe, individual aldermen. We have not in English a proper adjective which—like anlipig in Saxon and singulus in Latin—conveys the idea of numerous and solitary undertakings. Infra, p. 218 b, 'an ælpig' represents only one of these ideas, 'one single.' In the parable where they received 'every man a peny,' and where the Gospel has 'syndrige penegas,' a Homily has 'ba underfengon hi ænlipige penegas.' Thorpe's Analecta, p. 74. In the Paris Psalter, Ps. xiii. 2, it appears in the simple sense, 'no fordon anlepe'=non est usque ad unum. In Wiclif it appears as oonlypi, Luke vii. 12; viii. 42; ix. 38.

874. Hreope dune] Rippon C marg.: cf. 457 note.

874 A. anum unwisum] BCDE give the name, Ceolwulfe anum &c. Of this Ceolwulf II. of Mercia there is extant 'a beautiful and unique penny,' in the possession of Mr. Assheton. It is figured in Mr. Hawkins's account of the Cuerdale coins: Numismatic Chronicle, vol. v. p 10, 1843. Jubilee Edition of the Works of King Alfred, part ii. p 142.

875. Hreope dune] Rypon non Rypton upon Trent C marg. The annotator is mistaken. In Beda v. 1. we have the Saxon form for Rypon as 'Inhrypum.' This is rendered 'Repton' by MHB.

875. p 78. eft hergade on Peohtas] The correction of a oft instead of eft is supported by the other Chronicles B C D E, and justified by the sense. Here is a point in common with the Irish Annalists. Ann. Ulst. 874. Congressio Pictorum for Dubgallu (i. e. against the Danes) et strages magna Pictorum facta est.

876. Her hiene bestæl se here into Werham Wesseaxna flerde] In rendering this archaic passage, modern translators have gone wrong, first by taking Asser and Florence for their guides rather than the Saxon words; and, next, by a misapplication of the Latin. Thus the word flerde has come to be a castle. 'Castellum' in Ass. Flor. is (an extra, descriptive of Werham, but it is) not offered as an equivalent of flerde; he ignores the words 'Wesseaxna fierde.' The fact appears to be that the translator, whoever he was, of that version which is common (or nearly so) to Asser and Florence, seems not to have found it convenient to render these words. It is of course possible that they were absent in his copy—the phrase would still be complete without them (e. g. 865)—but it is difficult to adopt this explanation when we find the said words in ABCDE. We have the less hesitation in thinking that the same difficulty was felt by the ancient as by the modern translators, because one of them, and he the earliest to whom a date can be assigned, viz. Æthelweard, has made the most romantic nonsense in his attempt to turn it into Latin.

The obscurity results from two causes. I. The indistinctness of the case-ending of flords. It is a genitive, in construction with a compound verb in be-privative. If it had been a conspicuous genitive like 'rices besciered' 821, no one would have mistaken it. Or again, if it had had its article before it, as 'bestælon pære flerde' = stole away from the army (Thorpe) in this same annal, it would have been a little clearer. But, 2. what has tended still more to obscure the relation between bestæl and flerde, is the awkward and, I suppose we may say, archaic and even rude collocation. In the case quoted from 821, as well as in the parallel case in this same annal, the genitive is inseparate from its verb. But the meaning certainly is: Here the invading force deluded the national army and got into Werham.

876. abas sworon on pam halgan beage] beah is generally a ring; and thence particularly any circular ornament, frontlet, bracelet, necklace; all which notions may be seen condensed in its modern form badge. Those who are familiar with the collections of barbarian antiquities, such as are to be seen at Copenhagen or Dublin, know how largely primitive wealth was invested in ringed or spiral ornaments. The fashion survives in the 'crown' which is its most select example, and in the 'wedding ring' which is its most universal. These are still 'holy badges' upon which oaths are sworn. The Norsk name for the ring-oath was Baug-aior: cf. Egilsson in voc.

Other Saxon instances of the word may be seen, e. g. Cod. Dipl. 694—"anes beages is on syxtigum mancussum goldes"—apparently a golden crown 60 mancus-weight. In Ælfric's Homilies, vol. i. pp 416, 417, the martyr's 'crown of glory' is wuldor-beah; and he who is 'crowned with glory' is (p 52) said to be gewuldor-beagod. In Wright's Vocabularies, p 61, Dextrochirium=brad earm-beah; p 94, Umbo=rand-beah.

The French retain the word in bague, a ring; yet more significantly in the phrase bagues et joyaux, for valuables in jewellery; and une bague au doigt = a feather in one's cap.

876. and ergende weeron and hiera tilgende] "and were ploughing and some of them (?) were tilling." This hiera seems to be an archaic use of the genitive, in the sense of $some = i\xi \ a\partial \tau \hat{\omega} \nu$. The Asser-Florence version is founded on a confusion with here army: "illamque cum suo exercitu coluit."

877. This annal is very awkwardly put together, but I do not now, as I once did, suspect a dislocation. The sequence of events is made clear, if we observe that "and se cyning Ælfred æfter þam gehorsudan here mid fierde rád" looks back to the movement of the mounted Danes at the close of the previous annal, and 'rád' may conveniently be regarded as a pluperfect had ridden. The whole of this sentence down to "... to ne meahte" is parenthetical, and inserted here, because as the scene shifts from Swanawic to Exeter, it is necessary to report how Ælfred had come to Exeter. The treaty, hostages, &c., are not therefore in consequence of Ælfred's pursuit to Exeter, but of the disaster at Swanawic.

In Florence the whole narrative is omitted, which is strange, as it is unconsciously repeated in Asser; the first time more fully than in the Saxon, and a second time more meagrely. The two relations are given as of distinct events, and are connected by "Eodem anno." This delusion is partly sustained by the diversity of corruption which the name Swanawic has undergone. In one of the two accounts it is Gnavewic, and in the other Suanavine. The superior purity of the Saxon Chronicles appears here as at so many other places; for the modern name of Swanage bears testimony to the genuineness of 'Swanawic'=the village of swineherds. Swanage has been thus described by Mr. Kingsley: "A little semicircular bay on the E. of the Isle of Purbeck, its northern horn of chalk cliffs, and the southern of Purbeck marble. A quaint old-world village slopes down to the water over the green downs; quarried like some gigantic rabbitburrow, with the stone-workings of 700 years. Land-locked from every breeze, huge elms flourish on the dry sea-beach, and the gayest and tenderest garden-flowers bask under the hot stone-walls." Illustrated London News, December 26, 1857; in connection with Mr. Beckles's geological diggings.

878. buton pam cyninge Ælfrede] "Four words very powerful in their plain simplicity" (Pauli).

878. æfter wudum] per sylvestria (Asser): cf. p 90 h, æfter þæm wealda. In Somersetshire they still say, going along 'after the wall,'

'after the stream,' to signify following the line of. It is by transition from this usage, that we have the phrases 'After this manner,' and 'Deal not with us after our sins.'

878. p 80. on West Seaxum on Defena-scire Asser describe the scene of this decisive conflict by name, as 'Arx Cynuit.' Various attempts have been made along the north coast of Devon to identify this Arx Cynuit. Mr. Kingsley, in the opening of Westward Ho, brings it in as one of the historical features of the neighbourhood of Bideford. His young hero, temp. Eliz., is on the high ground that overlooks the estuary of the Torridge. "Beneath him on his right, the Torridge, like a land-locked lake, sleeps broad and bright between the old park of Tapeley and the charmed rock of the Hubbastone, where seven hundred years ago, the Norse rovers landed to lav siege to Kenwith Castle, a mile away on his left hand; and not three fields away are the old stones of 'The Bloody Corner,' where the retreating Danes, cut off from their ships, made their last fruitless stand against the Saxon sheriff and the valiant men of Devon. Within that charmed rock, so Torridge boatmen tell, sleeps now the old Norse Viking in his leaden coffin, with all his fairy treasure and his crown of gold; and as the boy looks at the spot, he fancies, and almost hopes, that the day may come when he shall have to do his duty against the invader as boldly as the men of Devon did then." Such is the illusory effect of tradition, even in modern times, that a mere conjecture of Camden's has taken root as a local reality. One would suppose from the above, that there was a genuine 'Kenwith Castle,' which the writer identifies with the historical event alluded But Camden knew of no such name in his day. "Hinc Tawus Towridgi aquis auctior Sabrinianum mare petit. An verò Chimligh illa sit Kinuith castrum cuius meminit Asserius, non facile dixerim." A far more probable spot appears to me to be 'Countesbury' near Linton; and possibly, if an elder form of that name could be found, it might approach nearer to 'Cynuit.'

878. p 80. Ecgbryhtes stane] Probably the judgment-seat of the district, and where the hundred-gemot or the scir-gemot was held, as at Ægelnoöes stane. Cod. Dipl. 755. The name has been identified with Brixton Deverill near Warminster.

878 E. p 81. Wealwudu] All the earlier Chronicles have 'Selwood,' but we need not suppose this to be a mere blunder of E. The meaning of 'Selwood' is the 'great wood,' and the meaning of 'Wealwudu' (cf. 'Weallande,' 1040 E) is the 'Welsh wood.' Selwood was for a long period the barrier between the Saxon and the Welsh territories, and it is quite conceivable, that it may have been purposely spoken of as Welshwood. At the risk of seeming to explain ignotum per ignotius, I cite 'Wychwood' as meaning 'Hwiccian wood,' if we may be guided by the spelling 'Hwiccewudu' in Cod. Dipl. 247.

878 A. p 80. behinon see] = on this side the channel. Infra, p 84, behienan Wendel see = this side the Mediterranean.

To this word answers the Latin citra, and that rare preposition of middle English, behither, which is found in Barnabas Oley's Preface to Herbert's Country Parson: "I have not observed any one thing (behither vice) that hath occasioned so much Contempt to the Clergy, as Unwillingness to take, or keep, a poor Living."

878. p 80 m. Epandune] Edyngton C marg.: cf. 457 note.

This place and Iglea have been variously identified. Iglea has been fixed at Clay Hill near Warminster (Gough and Sir C. Hoare); Leigh near Westbury (Gibson); Highley Common near Melksham (Whitaker), which seems every way the most probable.

Epandun has been identified with Edington near Westbury, partly because of its name, and partly because of its White Horse and Bratton Camp. Dr. Thurnam in Wiltshire Archæological and Natural History Magazine, 1853, maintains the view of Mr. Whitaker, that it is Yatton, five miles N. W. of Chippenham. I am inclined to place it at Heddington, on the line of the Roman road from Bath to Marlborough; to which it was assigned by Milner, History of Winchester, 1798. Dr. Thurnam objects strongly to this opinion, because the place is spelt Edinton in Domesday.

878. p 80. Alre] Aller (Somersetsh.) locally pronounced Oller. Many years ago, a friend took me to view the place and to call on Dr. Young, then Incumbent of Aller. My eye was caught by a vase, looking like a rude font, erected at the bottom of the lawn. On enquiry, it had been got out of the deep moat-like pond, which is at the foot of the slope. From time immemorial this water had never been cleared out, till Dr. Young had it done, and then this font came to light. Everything about the present church betokens energetic restoration in Norman times, and it is natural to conclude that then this old font was thrown aside. Of course this cannot be the very font at which Alfred stood sponsor to Guthrum; for the simple and conclusive reason, that such a thing is too good to be true.

878. p 80 l. crismlising] chrismatis solutio. Asser. Flor.

This was a rite in use up to the Reformation, Maskell i. 36; iii. xxi. note.

Unction (χρίσμα; in English, 'chrism' and later 'chrysom;' in French, 'le saint chrême') was used in Baptism, Confirmation, Coronation. A linen band was then put about the head or other anointed part, and kept on for certain days. This was the vestis chrismelis, pannus chrismelis, or simply chrismele. The removal was done with ceremony, and in church ("tertia die vadant... ad ecclesiam ad chrismalia deponenda," Rubric in Maskell i. 36). This is the orismlising.

After Coronation it was not removed till the eighth day. "In the old account of the coronation of Henry VI. we find, after the anointing: 'And then they leyd a certeyn softe thynge to all the places so annoynted. And on his hede dyd a white coyfe of silk, and so he went and lay viij dayes. And the viijth daye they shald wasshe it of hym.' Also in the Devyse for the coronation of Henry VIII: 'He shall put vpon the kyng's hed a coyfe, the same to be broughte to the grete chamberlayne: whiche shall contynuelly abyde on the kings hed to the viijth daye next following, at whiche viij dayes [end], after a solempne masse seyd by a Bisshop before the king, the seid Bishop shall take the coyf from the kyng's hed." Maskell iii. xxi. From a note on this page in Maskell it would appear that this passage of our Chronicle is the most ancient mention known to Ritualists of the deposition of the Chrismale.

De Quincey ("Essays") says that, to this hour, in our London bills of mortality, there is one subdivision headed, "Chrysom children," viz. those which have died within a month from birth. It was the custom to bury them in baptismal robes; to which the northern Spaniards (Biscay) add, "A happy garland of the pure white rose." The value anciently attached to chrism in baptism is traceable in the fact, that the word stamped itself on a whole round of objects. There was the chrysom itself, or act of anointing; the chrysom-oil; the chrysom-child; the chrysom-vesture.

879. wicenga] This Saxon form is less delusive as to its etymology than the Norsk form viking, which has suggested the erroneous connection with 'king.' Mr. Dasent has already pointed out that this word is a derivative from vik = a creek, sinus maris, which might well have been the basis of their designation, as they used creeks for piratical lurking-places. Possibly, however, a more general sense attached to the word; for vik was used also of the open sea, and viking might have been merely 'son of the sea,' one who lived by sea-plunder, a sea-rover.

880. Ciron coastro] cyceter C marg.: cf. 457 note.

881. ufor] This is not merely 'further' (MHB), 'ulterius' (Grimm, Gr. i. 247), nor 'up' (Thorpe)—but as Ingram has it, 'higher up,' superius, ἀνωτέρω. It is the comparative of an old and lost uf (a dialectic variety of up) extant in German in the prep. auf -but which in the Northern dialects faded into of, (as ufor into ofor (E882), unde ofer, subst. adv. prep.) This modified or corrupt of came thus to be confusable with our modern preposition of; and hence one probable cause of the neglect of the former. But it is important to make acquaintance with this of, because though nowhere found alone, it continued in use in compounds. The A.S. verbs in of- have been ill understood, from the error of association with $of = ab = d\pi \delta$, instead of of=auf, with a force in composition much like that of ofer-. The simple positive uf or ufe we probably have in the proper name Ufegeat (p 140) [= Highgate]: also in Offa, Yffi (Bd. ii. 14, 20), Yffe (560), Uffingas, Ubii. Comparative ufor, in its adj. use in Bd. v. 2. on 5mm uferan dæle=in superiore parte: Jos. iv. 6. on uferum dagum, in days to come. Superlative, Gen. xl. 17. on 8am ufemystan windle=in the uppermost basket. Adverb of place, ufan = ἄνωθεν, desuper. In 882, feor (A) is probably a mere error for ufor, as appears from BCD.

883 E. ælmessan to Rome be Ælfred eing gehet bider] F Lat.: Rex Ælfredus misit elemosinam quam voverat dum sederet contra exercitum cum paucis, cum multi essent inimici, Romæ.

F 884. An insertion misplaced by a hundred years: this Chronicle (F) has the death of Æðelwold again under its true year 984.

885. p84. Wendel sæ] This name for the Mediterranean indicates a time when that sea was known to the northern nations through or in connection with the Slavonic people, who were formerly known collectively by the name Winidæ. See Professor Max Müller's Lectures, p 204.

886. be ser east gelende] qui antea in Oriente appulerant (Gibson); that before were bent eastward (Ingram); which before had drawn eastward (MHB); which had before landed in the east (Thorpe). The reference is to the opening of 885, where the piratical army parts in two, "oper deel east" = altera pars Orientem versus. That division which had then moved eastwards, now reversed its course. This is plainly the sense; but the word is not easily accounted for. The same verb is used again below, p 92 t, in the participle, 'he wes on hergad gelend' = he was gone foraging: where it is a reiteration of the 'ut afaren on hergap' some lines above. I am not aware of any instance of this verb in the sense of 'to land, appellere,' which Mr. Thorpe has assigned to it in his Anal. Glos. v. Gelendian. There is a 'gelende' on p 45 of the Analecta (Ed. 1846) which has to do with 'land' in the sense of ager: " Pa seofon mynstru he gelende mid his agenum"=These seven mineters he endowed with land from his own property. As the counterpart of this 'gelende,' we have a Chronicle E (p 233 t) 'belende'=deprived of lands.

But this 'gelende' is quite foreign to our text, which has to do with movement; and if connected with 'land' at all, is so only in the vaguest and most general way. We have our word again in Orosius, Book iii. c. 1. § 4. Ed. Bosworth; "æfter þam Conon gelende to Ahtene;" where Professor Bosworth has justly rendered it, "Conon came to Athens."

I suspect a connection between this verb and the adjective lang=long; of which we have derivatives signifying movement of the desires; e.g. langian, verlangen—langoo, desiderium—langung, desiderium—langung-hwil, tempus tædii: and we still use the verb to long for the expression of urgent desire. I imagine then that 'gelende' is quasi 'gelencgde' a preterite of 'lencgan or lengan,' of which we have 'lengde' below 1072, only in the sense of delay. Whether the German 'lenken' is of this root or not, it is a very inviting word in this connection. Sich rechts—links lenken is just the notion required.

After five centuries we find it again, e. g. in "Cheuelere Assigne," line 5 (Roxburghe Club), not much modified in sense:

For this I saye by a lorde was lente in an yle That was called Lyor, a lond by him selfe.

Also, compare Halliwell's Archaic Dictionary, v. lent; where is cited the following MS. instance:

On a laund are thay lent By a forest syd.

886. gesette Ælfred Lunden burg &c.] Interea obsidetur a rege Ælfredo urbs Lundonia: et quem ingenio quem occursu non superaverat civilis discordia sæva, hunc ut redemptorem suscepere cuncti, et maximè genus Saxonum, excepto Barbaræ gentis et his qui sub manu eorum tum captivi tenebantur. Etiam post manus catervæ confirmates, ibi constituitur dux Æthred à rege præfato, custodiendi arcem. Æthelweard.

Ælfred Angulsaxonum rex, post incendia urbium stragesque populorum, Lundoniam civitatem honorificè restauravit et habitabilem fecit; quam genero suo Ætheredo Merciorum comiti commendavit servandam, ad quem regem omnes Angli et Saxones, qui prius ubique dispersi fuerant, aut cum Paganis sub [v. l. sine] captivitate erant, voluntariè converterunt et suo dominio se subdiderunt. Asser. Flor.

Rex Anglorum post incendia urbium stragesque populorum, Londoniam permaximam civitatem honorifice restauravit et habitabilem fecit, quam Ethelredo pracipuo duci Merciorum commendavit servandam. Omnes verd, Angli et Saxones, qui prius ubi ubi erant dispersi cum Paganis aut à captivitate liberati, venerunt sponte ad regis prasentiam, sponte se suo domino inclinantes. Ipse autem ut erat clementissima mentis cunctis indulsit patrocinium sua benignitatis. Simeon Dunelm.

Alfredus rex Londoniam obsedit, quia maxima vis Dacorum secuta fuerat Gallicanum exercitum, omnes autem Anglici statim ei subditi sunt et receperunt eum. Daci namque aufugerunt. Rex verd tradidit Ædredo duci civitatem in custodiam. Henry of Huntingdon.

King Alfred laid siege to the city of London and took it; the Angles flocked to him, and the Danes retreated. He entrusted Ethelred, the earl of the Mercians, with the restoration of the city. Chron. Melrose (tr. Stevenson).

In these versions there is a manifest contradiction. According to some, London was desolate through the ravages of the wars (Asser, Flor., Simeon)—according to others, it was in a state fit to be besieged (Æthelweard, Hen. H., Melrose). Nay more, according to Henry Hunt. the opportunity to lay siege to it arose out of the abstraction of important numbers which had joined the army for Gaul; implying that its normal condition at that time was so populous and strong as to defy attack.

It is plain to see that these conflicting accounts have risen out of the text before us, and how they have risen. The divergence was caused by the different senses put upon the word gesette. This word means founded, instituted, colonized, peopled (Oros. B. i. c. 10. § 5. and B. iii. c. 5. § 2. Ed. Bosworth; also see infra 890, the intr. gesæt); but it seemed a strange thing to say of so ancient a city, that "Alfred founded it." Hence the explanations of Asser-Flor. &c. about the desolations of the wars, by which, in conjunction with a modified version of gesette (viz. honorifice restauravit et habitabilem fecit), the paradox of founding London was eluded.

The other class of Latinizers could not by any contrivance bring themselves to admit a founding or even a refounding of London, and so they virtually changed gesette into besæt. Such a clumsy solution need not astonish us either in Æthelweard (cf. Introduction) or in Henry of Huntingdon (cf. p 113 note). They translated a word which means he founded by he besieged.

Yet with all this violence, they are able to render better justice to their original than the accommodating Asser-Flor. They are able at least to bring out a reasonable sense, without disturbing the order of the original. Which Asser-Flor. has not been able to do.

For what sense could there be in interposing a general adhesion of all Angli et Saxones everywhere, between what Alfred did for London, and what hands he left the place in? So Asser-Flor. has coupled the two latter items, and then appended the adhesion. Both classes have found it necessary to do violence to the text.

It is easier to see that the Latiners are wrong, than to supply the correction. I offer the following rather with the hope of stimulating enquiry, and particularly among local archæologists, rather than a expecting it will be received as final. London was a flourishing and opulent city, the chief emporium of commerce in the island, and the residence of foreign merchants. Properly, it was now an Angk city, the chief city of the Anglian nation of Mercia, but the Danes had settled there in great numbers, and they had numerous captives that they had taken in the late wars. Thus the Danish population had a preponderance over the Anglian free population, and the latter were glad to see Alfred come and restore the balance in their favour. It was of the greatest importance to Alfred to secure this city, not only as the capital of Mercia (caput regni Merciorum Malmesh.), but as the means of doing what Mercia had not done, viz. of making it a barrier to the passage of pirate ships inland. Accordingly, in the year 886, Alfred planted the garrison of London (i.e. not as a town is garrisoned in our day, with men dressed in uniform and lodged in barracks, but) with a military colony of men to whom land was given for their maintenance, and who would live in and about a fortified position under a commanding officer. It appears to me not impossible that this may have been the first military occupation of Tower Hill, but this is a question for the local antiquary.

All I would insist upon here, is this; that Lunden burh is not to be taken as merely equivalent to Lunden. I have counted 63 places in the Chronicles in which the latter occurs, but I have only been able to discover 13 instances of Lundenburh. In one of these, 896 init., the Danes are said to have gone up the Lea and made a strong work 20 miles above Lundenburh. This description would be particularly appropriate, if Lundenburh occupied the site of the Tower. Also, one then sees why they should go up the Lea, viz. because their old passage up the Thames was intercepted. Upon this view, the whole sentence is in sense and order: The same year Alfred founded the burh of London, and he was joined by all Londoners of Angle-race who were not compulsorily prevented by Danish servitude. And he committed the burh to aldorman Æsered to hold.

I know not how much weight is to be given to the text of F in this place, but it certainly has an appearance of being independent of the other Chronicles, and it rather lends countenance to the emphasis I have claimed for the word burh. Her gesette Ælfred cing pa burh Lundene. and him eall Angelcynn tocyrde.

It is a pleasure for once to observe that Æthelweard, against whom we have so much to say, is here (as the nearest in date ought to be) the best interpreter (e. g. catervæ—arcem), so far as his meaning can be discerned through the mist of his puzzle-headed rhetoric.

887. The deposition of Charles-le-Gros. His accession is given above at 885; both dates true. For the details of Carlovingian affairs, consult the voluminous "Histoire Littéraire de la France," by the Benedictines of St. Maur.

887. p 86. to geboren] born to the inheritance of the empire. The to here acts a semi-prepositional part, as in to gehalgode three lines above. But the compiler or copier of E in the twelfth century, though he understood to gehalgode, did not understand to geboren. The verbal prefix to, so largely used in our ancient language, had already begun to fade out of importance, in proportion as it extended its purely prepositional functions. Within the literary period since 1611, educated men lost sight (for a time) of the meaning of a verb compounded with this prefix, although it stood in a tolerably conspicuous situation, viz. Judges ix. 53.

887. p 86. Æbelhelm aldor mon] Æthelhelm comes Wiltunensium (Asser). At the record of his death, below 898, he is called in T., Æbelm Wiltunscire ealdormon. He is a person of mark, as the protector of the young Dane Odo, who was driven from his home for embracing Christianity, and who afterwards became Archbishop of Canterbury. Dean Hook, vol. i. p 362.

887. p 86; and 888. lædde . . . ælmessan] So in Yorkshire they talk of leading hay, leading corn &c. from the field, in carts and wagons. The modern phraseology is, 'to convey certain presents, &c.' Dean Hook, vol. i. p 364.

Chaucer's Ploughman in the Prologue, 1.532, was one 'That hadde ilad of dong ful many a fothur,' i.e. who had carried a-field a great many horse-loads of dung. This reading has been restored in the Edition of the Percy Society, by Mr. Thomas Wright.

891. butan ælcum gereðrum] Stevenson translates "without any rudder." Ingram, "without any oars." The Saxon comprises both. The rowage and steerage were not so distinct as now. The steering was done by oar over the ship's side, as may be seen in old illuminations. Hence the term 'starboard'="the steering side." In Ohthere's Narrative (Oros. i. 1) steerbord and bæcbord stand for starboard and larboard. But perhaps Gibson's "sine ullo remige" is the best of all. In the Vocabularies we find Remex, repra (Wright, p 48): Nauta, gerepru—as well as Aplustre, gerepru—(p 56): Remex vel nauta, reora (pp 73, 88). By butan selcum gereorum was probably meant, without any mariners to navigate the craft.

891. And Swifneh se betsta lareow be on Scottum was gefor.] The cast of this phrase implies the scholastic celebrity which Ireland at this time enjoyed among the nations. "Swifneh died, chief doctor in Hibernia, the Academy of Europe." Scotus Erigena [Erin-born Scot], the beacon of learning and the ornament of the Frankish Court, was dead a few years earlier. Mr. Goldwin Smith says: "During the seventh and eighth centuries, and part of the ninth, Ireland played a really great part in European history." Irish History and Irish Character, p 28. It will please a philological eye to see these foreign names in their native form. Through the zeal of the Dublin scholars, the stores of Irish History are now open, and the distinguished names of each period are accessible. names are all found in the Index to the Annals of Ireland, by the Four Masters (Ed. O'Donovan), as borne by memorable personages about this date. The Irish forms are.

Dubshlaine,
Mac Beathaidh,
Maolionmain (Maelinmhain, Mod. Irish),
Suibhne.

The latter—the great teacher of Ireland—is identified in the Irish Obituary of 887. He is "Suibhne, son of Maclumha, anchorite and scribe of Cluain-mic-Nois." The Editor notes that the date 892 given in Sax. Chron. is the true year of his death, and that a tombstone inscribed with his name is still preserved at Clonmacnoise. He refers to Petrie's Round Towers, p 323.

Of the three pilgrims, it is possible that one of them is the "Maolionmain eccnaidh—ancoire Glinne da locha" = wise man and anchorite of Glendaloch; whose death is recorded in 953, sixty years after the present date. The probability is greatly heightened by the fact that this is the only individual of the name in the Index.

891. same] An archaism which has survived the handling of the copier in this manuscript only. All the others have altered it to sume, a foolish reading—as if there were two opinions, and "some men" held the identity of the comet with the stella crinita. It is either a relative pronoun="which same," ὅνπερ; or else an adverbial conjunction, meaning likewise, withal, pariter, etiam. The latter is rendered the more probable by Cædmon 397, swa some= likewise; and by passages in Alfred's version of Boethius, where we have swa same, or eac swa same, i. e. 'likewise also.' In Orosius, p 45, Ed. Bosworth, women fight as well as (swa same swa) men; and in Apollonius, p 3, Ed. Thorpe, we read that he who rightly answered the riddle was led to execution swa same swa, i. e. just the same as he who interpreted it wrongly. This phrase is frequent in Old Saxon in the form so same; see Schmeller's Heliand, Glossary, v. Same. Also Ettmüller, Lex. Sax. p 625.

In another form it occurs in Orosius, cap. i. Narrative of Wulfstan, where a tribe of Esthonians is said to possess the art of making water to freeze, sam hit sy sumor, sam winter, just the same, whether it be winter or summer. Numerous examples of sam, as a particle in composition, may be seen in Grimm, Gr. ii. p 764.

893 A. Bunnan] to bunan C; Boloniam que et bononia, hodie boleyn C marg.: cf. 457 note.

893. swa þæt hie asettan him on ænne siþ] Cf. 1001: swa þ hy upp asetton on ænne siþ swa þ hy asettan him upp ón ænne sið.

893 A. live ut of peem wealda] runs out of the weald. live 3rd sing. pres. of live and to go, to pass, to move; from which came a family of words, mostly appropriated to navigation. See Ettmüller's Lexicon, p 190. Compare the following from a Copenhagen MS. (communicated in Archæological Journal, 1859): Se pe bive of earde and feor of his cyve. hu mæg he ham cuman gif he nele leornian hu se weg lioge pe live to his cyve? He who is absent from his land and far from his people, how can he get home if he will not learn how the way lies that goes to his country?

893. on ha ea hi tugon up hiora scipu ob one weald. iiii mila fram hem muhan utan weardum] They towed their ships up that river so far as the weald, four miles from the outside of the harbour. So much has the coast changed in that part, that there is no river now to be found which would admit the Danish ships. (As to their probable size, see note on 787.) But there are three places where, in the early condition of this shifting shore, vessels may have passed up to what is now the high land N. of the shore. According to the present aspect of the ground, Rye seems the most likely spot, as indicating the former outflow of a large river; next in promise, comes Romney, where there must once have been a large estuary. When we search for the inland spot towards which they made their way, it is the gap between Appledore and Ebony Chapel that is selected alike by the explorer of the country and the explorer of the map. There is a line of fault in the deeper seated strata from Tenterden through the alluvial plain by Appledore, and extending on towards Romney, which may indicate an old channel. Probably there were two or three outlets diverging by Appledore. The elevated ground of Appledore, Playden, Ebony Chapel, Kennardington, &c., probably once formed the actual coast-line. These were high lands in early British times, with inlets of the sea converging to the N. W., and receiving the currents of the Weald country. That there was once a capacious river crossing the plain, was proved not many years ago by the discovery of a large vessel which was dug out of the alluvial soil two miles E. of Newenden.

But neither Rve nor Romney will satisfy all the conditions for identification with the muha of the text. Off at the eastern extreme of the plain we observe the name Lympne, which obviously claims connection with the ancient river 'Limen,' as well as with the harbour and Roman station 'Portus Lemanis,' which has been fixed in the Ordnance Map near Lympne. The question then rises, whether there was ever a river skirting that side of the plain and running out by Hythe. There is physical evidence to shew that the expanse of shingle between Hythe and Dymchurch is a very modern deposit, and that it is now gradually increasing. And there is some remarkable documentary evidence. In Cod. Dipl. 47 (A. D. 715) certain land is defined as lying "ad australem quippe fluminis quæ appellatur limin aea," the river being the N. boundary: and in No. 234 (A.D. 833) the river Limen or Limin is used as a S. boundary-"ab austro fluvius qui dicitur limin ace." In both these cases, the river is represented as holding a course E. and W. This evidence. joined with the other data, helps to the conclusion that in the eighth and ninth centuries a river ran from Appledore due E. towards Hythe, where was a harbour which is now represented by the shingle between Hythe and Dymchurch. The line of this river would be nearly the same as that of the new canal. It appears then that so late as the close of the ninth century, the river Limen flowing out by Hythe was the chief effluent of this Delta; but that the channel being silted up and the harbour filled with shingle, all superficial evidence of this river has disappeared. It seems that the next chief outlet was by way of Romney, perhaps not a great while after the Conquest. At length Romney harbour itself was stopped by a great storm about 300 years ago, which closed the inlet with shingle. Since that, the chief drain of water has been through the Rother to Rye, and this remains now the only extant channel of the three. At first, the three coexisted, though the other two may have been insignificant while the Limen was in full action. Of one we find mention in Cod. Dipl. 1072, flumen quod vocatur Rumenea; and of the other we have evidence in the name Rother, which is an ancient river name, far older than the highest date contemplated in this note.

As to the shifting character of this district, Mr. Etheridge of the Geological Survey of Great Britain, to whom I am indebted for the materials of this note, says, that Lydd and New Romney once stood on the shore, and the coast is now increasing at the rate of eight yards per annum, the Lighthouse on Denge beach standing so much farther in every year. "I think the great alluvial plain of Romney Marsh and Walling Marsh covers up much of the early Physical History of that coast. There is no reason whatever why, in former times, there may not have been an extensive river running up to Appledore either from Romney or Rye or even Hythe."

There can be no doubt that Apuldre, which is mentioned in the next paragraph, and again on p 91, as the station of the Danish ships, is identical with this Appledore. The clearance of the forest of the Weald has caused the rivers to shrink, as the clearance of the sides of the Apennines has made the Campagna suffer from drought.

894 t. foregisla] It is not clear what is the signification of the fore- here and at 877, 878. Whether it expresses the representative function of the hostages, as being for their nation, or whether it signifies hostages from the foremost persons. Asser ad loc. speaks of "electos obsides." Except this, there is nothing in the Latin historians to distinguish foregislas from the simple gislas. But in 877 and 878, where hostages and oaths are combined, the latter are in both cases magnified by the adj. micle, so that fore would appear to have a like effect on the former.

894 h. oppe on heora healfe an. Pa] A too rigid adherence to the MS. has here led me into an impracticable reading. The testimony of the next MSS. is for the reading, oppe on heora healfe. Ond he &c.

894 h. rymet] room, space, opening. This uncommon word is found in Joshua i. 3, and it occurs repeatedly in Cod. Dipl. 594.

. 894 h. bi swa hwaperre efes swa hit boñ flerdleas wæs] The word efes, which we retain only for the eaves of the roof, seems to have been habitually appropriated to the margent of the wood: cf. Cod. Dipl. 209, to bæs wudes efese=to the wood's edge; 353,0% hit cimed to dære efese. Sonne å nord be wyrtwalan &c.; also 715, Hrisebyrgan be Cilternes efese=Risborough on the edge of Chiltern.

894 l. here hyo] army-supplies, provisions. See notes to S. Maria Ægyptiaca, p 115.

804 b. igga8] river-island, 'evot.'

stemn gesetenne] stemninge gesetene BC; steminge gesetene D. Here we have the participle of an intransitive verb in concord with its indirect object, which is rather super-grammatical. It seems to have been attracted into conformity with the 'mete ge notudne' that was coming, and which is quite normal, as 'mete' is, in technical grammar, an accusative governed by 'notian' Chaucer has.

It is ful faire a man to bear him even For al day meten men at unset steven. C. T. 1525.

In this passage the verb is settan=to appoint, statuere; but in our text it is sittan=to sit, sedere. For want of observing this distinction, Ettmüller (Lex. p 728) has wrongly rendered this place, illi habuerunt tempus præstitutum. It is, They had sate out or served their term of service: cf. 921, se fird stemn for hum.

894. p 91 h. buton swipe gewaldenum deele easteweardes pees folces] besides a very considerable body moving eastward, but they were of the people, self-enlisted volunteers, and no part of the flerd. This distinction between folc and fierd appears again, p 107 b, 'gegadorode micel folc hit.'

894. p 92 t. cumpæder] The Latin word compater, which probably at this date was still understood in its etymological sense, of the relation subsisting between two men who were godfathers to the same child, or between a godfather and the natural father. Alfred and Æbered were both in this relation to Hæsten, as appears in the previous sentences. Cf. Cod. Dipl. 709, Eadrico meo compatri. The word soon became generalized; and in the Lexicon Manuale Infimæ Latinitatis, par Maigne D'Arnis, it is rendered "Sodalis, amicus; cumarade, ami." It began and ended much as our gossip (Sax. God sib, quasi coram Deo affinis).

Mary Queen of Scots, writing to the Constable de Montmorency, begins "Mon Compère;" in which case Miss Strickland says it was merely a term of familiarity. However, we find the feminine still in earnest use, in a letter of Melville to Queen Elizabeth, asking her to be gossip at the baptism of Mary's infant son James. For (says he) in England they call the comers (commères) gossips.

894. p 92 m. Buttingtune] Two places have hitherto contended for this site, viz. Boddington near Cheltenham and Buttington in Montgomeryshire near Welshpool. But Mr. Ormerod (Archæologis, vol. xxix; and Strigulensia, p 60) has put forward a claim for Buttinton in Tidenham, on the peninsula formed by the Severn and the Wye. There are traces of works here, though less considerable than those at Buttington in Montgomeryshire. Mr. Ormerod grounds his claim mainly upon Matthew of Westminster's "paganos tam navali quam terrestri exercitu circumcinxit." No such thing appears in the text before us, but to the opposite effect. One is almost tempted to suspect that this 'Verwirrer der Geschichte' (as Lappenberg calls Matthew of Westminster) caught sight of 'sciphere' in the next line and imagined the rest. But it must be allowed, Mr. Ormerod's position has its advantages. It does not, however, suit 'pa up be Sæferne,' if this means that they went up-stream, which would seem to be its meaning, though not in Florence.

894. p 92 l. miclne] The omission of the 'e' is not mere haste; B has myclne. It is as proper a form as micelne.

894. p.93. westre ceastre] Westch' civitas legion est C marg.: cf. 457 note. They reached a waste or deserted fortress in Wirrall called Legaceaster. This is the true source of the name of "West Chester," which Richard of Cirencester, a contemporary of Chaucer, identifies with Deva, B. i. c. 6. § 27. All idea of this name having any connection with the 'West' is dissipated by this place in the Chronicle, for west=occidens, cannot take the inflection westre. That Chester was for a period desolate, like Uriconium or Silchester, may surprise any one to whom it is new, but it is no way contrary to the analogy or probability of history.

894. p 93. on selectre efenchée] on every plain, or pasture field. The substantive efenché is the abstract of efen=even, smooth; and corresponds to the OHG forms ebanêd, m.; ebanêti, f.=planities (cf. Graff). This word both in England and in Germany has served for local names: we have it well preserved in Emneth near Wisbeach; and in Germany are found Ebnet, Ebnit, Breitebnet. Die Deutschen Ortsnamen von Ernst Förstemann: Nordhausen, 1863, p 62.

895. on foran winter] on forwerdne — B; on forweardne — C; on forweard — D.

896. p 94 h. gerypon . . . ripes] In Mr. Wright's Anglo-Saxon Vocabularies, p 74, Messor, riptere; Messis, ge rip: cf. Matth. ix. 38. In Somersetshire 'reaping' is pronounced 'ripping.'

gehawade] surveyed, inspected, reconnoitred; perlustravit. In Zosimas Fragm. p 108. l. 22. to bære halgan Godes cennestran hawiende=intuens, drevlfovoa. Paris Psalter xiii. 3. See the few words of this family in Ettmüller, p 485; who observes that its analogue is not found in the other dialects.

Cwat bryege] Bryege D; below Briege B C, and Brygege D. Gibson shews it to be Bridgenorth, which place in his day was still known as 'Brigge.'

896. p 94 m. steel wyroe] The rendering 'captu dignæ' of Gibson is based on association with the verb 'to steal,' which is incongrues here. This steel is identical with the German Stelle=place, rose, station: and ships are steelwyroe which are fit for their place, worthy of their post, seaworthy, serviceable. An analogous compound may be seen p 95 m, 'nytwyroeste;' and in Boethius xl. 1. 'nytwyroe.' The first English translation of this word is by Mr. Thorpe, who renders it by a later form of itself, stalworth. The only form of this word known to modern English is the Scottish(?) form stalwart; or it may be the alterate of stealweard, custos loci, the keeper and maintainer of the position.

I am indebted to my friend Mr. Baron for some excellent illastrations of this hitherto obscure word. Wiclif in Dan. viii. 24, "and his strengthe schal be mand stalworthe" = et roborabitur fortitude ejus (Vulg.)—other instances in the Glossarial Index of the Oxford Edition. See also references in H. Coleridge's Glossarial Index, v. stalward and following words. Mr. Baron gives me Stallworthy as an existing surname.

Since the above was written, I have been surprised to find that Miss Gurney (1819) has here the palm over all the translators before or since. Thus: And all that were serviceable they brought into London.

897. p 95 h. geoungnestan] Again 905. In Mr. Wright's Vecabularies, p 47, " Emeritus, provectus, gepungen."

897. p 95 m. unwealtran] less liable to roll; unwaltier as we may say now, since Longfellow has restored the word to literature, in "The Phantom Ship" (1858):

But Master Lamberton muttered, And under his breath said he, "This ship is so crank and walty I fear our grave she will be!"

D has here the very beautiful and interesting v. l. untealtran = less tilty.

897. p 95 m. uter mere] = outer sea, open sea; as opposed to the creek or sestuary. Chaucer, Cant. Tales, l. 15966, has "to thin uter eyen"—which is rendered in the margin of one of the MSS. "exterioribus oculis" (Tyrwhitt). Troil. iii. 665. "And I wol in that utter house alone."

897. p 96 h. cynges geneat] "Lye understands this as meaning 'the king's neat-herd;' but 'geneat' signifies a companion, and is probably the Saxon representative of the Latin comes." (Stevenson) Geneat is the German genefics. In the Laws of Inc. $ 10, the wergild of a cynges geneat is 1200s, the same as that of a cyninges begen, and the high rank of the title is apparent here from the fact of particular mention. See Schmid, v. geneat.

897. p 96 m. Wealh gefera] Wealhgerefa B C D, which Kemble (Saxons, vol. ii. p 178) adopts, without noticing the reading of A. The same variation occurs on the previous page, line 4; where BCD read wicgerefa. Kemble thinks he was a royal reeve to whose care Ælfred's Welsh serfs were committed; and is not inclined to think that he was a margrave, commissioned to watch the Welsh border. I must think the reverse, as I know nothing about Ælfred's Welsh serfs, and as there is evidence that the Welsh border was continually under surveillance. The king of Mercia had been wont to keep guard along the line of Offa's Dyke. The property in that neighbourhood was subject to an impost for the maintenance of this guard. In 855, Burgred, king of Mercia, gave land to the monastery of Blockley in Worcestershire, adding to his gift an exemption à pastu et refectione illorum hominum quos Saxonice nominamus Walhfareld (Cod. Dipl. 278), by which I understand the patrolling corps on the Welsh border. The same body seems spoken of C 1053, p188 of this vol.: "Særa weardmanna"=the ward-men who were slain by the Welsh near Westbury. Whether we read Wealhgefera or -gerefa, I understand the commander of this force, charged with the defence of the border; and I prefer Wealhgefera because of its correlativeness with Walhfæreld = Wallica expeditio. At a later period, the line was fortified with castles. We read of William Rufus in 1997, he be ham gemæron castelas let gemakian.

In a genuine charter of the eighth century, Cod. Dipl. 95, one Alda signs as cinges gefera.

901. "Albrit rex Giuoys moritur" (Annales Cambriæ), i.e. rex Gewissorum.

901. Da gerad.... pa rad....] Here is a good place for observing a special use of the prepositive ge-. It has not unfrequently the force of turning an intransitive verb, such as 'to go,' 'to ride,' into a transitive 'to go and get,' 'to ride and win,' or 'to win by going, by riding &c.' So here, Æelwald rode and secured the ham, and thereupon the king rode with the militia till &c.

A strong instance is gewinnan (1090)=to win; which sense, now so intimately identified with this root, is not in the simple verb winnan until compounded with ge. Winnan is to toil, fight, contend: gewinnan is to get by striving, fighting, contending; i. e. in one word, to win: cf. 685.

901. Tweoxneam] "hodie, ab æde Christo sacra, Christchurch; olim, quod inter amnes interpositum, Twinamburne, eodem planè sensu quo Italiæ Interamna. Hæc Camd. in descriptione agri Hamtunensis. Certe vox Saxonica Tweoxnea[m] (quæ duplices fluvium significat [rather, inter fluvios]) antiquo isti nomini optimè respondet, nec, mea quidem opinione, alibi quærendus est hic locus. Quod etiam confirmat Winburnæ (agri Dorsætensis oppidi) vicinitas; hæc enim duo, parvo temporis intervallo, dicitur Æthelwaldus in suam potestatem redegisse." Gibson.

901. p 98. Pa berad mon peet wif] The lady was arrested suddenly by surprise on the part of those who claimed her. Those who had might to capture or imprison a legal adversary were allowed under certain conditions the right of doing so, in the Laws of Alfred (42, § 1); and in this concession the verb beridan occurs as descriptive of the process that would be used.

905. Crecca gelade] Crac-B; Creacc-C; Creocc-D. Below 1016, it is by C spelt Cregelade; by E, Cræcilade; by F, Crecalade. Now Cricklade. All these are varying forms of the British cerrig= a stone.

917. Hoceneratune] Hocenertune BC; Hoceneretune D. In Gough's Camden ii. p14. this is identified with 'Hocknorton or Hokenorton' (Oxon), now written Hook Norton. "The large round barrows of Tadmerton were probably cast up on this occasion by the Danes, and the smaller (rather square) at Hocknorton by the Saxons."

018. Lidwiccum Cf. 885 (p 84). A strange derivation of this name is given in a (doubtful) passage of Nennius xxiii: "Britones namque Armorici, qui ultra mare sunt, cum Maximo tyranno hinc in expeditionem exeuntes, quoniam redire nequiverant, occidentales partes Galliæ solo tenus vastaverunt nec mingentes ad parietem vivere reliquerunt: acceptisque eorum uxoribus et filiabus in conjugium, omnes earum linguas amputaverunt, ne eorum successio maternam linguam disceret; unde et nos illos vocamus in nostra lingua Letewicion, id est semitacentes, quoniam confusè loquuntur." Whatever this be worth, it illustrates Ethnic Names of the βάρβαροι type. See a collection of these in Words and Places, by Rev. Isaac Taylor, c. iv. Camden says: "Hæc regio primum Armorica dicta erat, i. ad mare sita, deinde Britanicè Llydaw, i. littoralis, Latinè Letavia apud nostros mediæ ætatis scriptores, unde Letos fuisse suspicor quos in Gallia nominat Zosimus, postremò Britannia Minor à Britannis nostris:" p 57. Ed. 1594. Is it possible that the corrupt 'Lemovices' in Cæsar's Catalogue of the Armorican States (B. G. vii. 75) may be our 'Lidwiccas' in disguise? Mr. Thorpe (Lappenberg, vol. ii. p 95) thinks the form 'Lidwicingum' in 885 (C D), and in the Traveller's Song, would countenance a derivation from lid, ship, and wicing, pirate. It is not at all improbable that these words may have had an after-influence on the Saxon form of the name, in the way of what the Germans call Folfe-etymologic.

918. be ham see] Instead of see, B C D have statum. The text of A appears imperfect as it stands; the intended expression was probably be ham see riman; as in p 95 m, and E 991, 994. We should hardly expect to find see masculine at this date, and even if the gender were not a difficulty, the expression is at best a strong solecism.

Of the word stadum we have a dative-singular, p 95 h, be pem substade. The change of the inner vowel se in the singular, and as in the plural, depends on the principles of what Grimm (Deutsche Grammatik, Bk. i) has named Umlaut and Rückumlaut. This fine point of orthography had vanished by the time of Lazamon: "uppen Seuarne stape," l. 7. And the word itself has quite dropped out of standard English. But it still retains a good local hold; see Halliwell's Archaic Dictionary, v. Stathe. In Aldhelm's Psalter xxii. 2 (our xxiii) it stands: And fedde me be wætera stadum.

918. Cameleac] Cimeliauc bishop of Llandaff. Stubbs, p 156.

Iroinga felda] "Fortasse ab Ariconio veteri oppido, cujus in hoc tractu meminit Antoninus, inquit Camd." (Gibson). Ariconium seems to have been either at Ross or at Weston-under-Penyard, 2 m. from Ross. Was Iroinga feld an old name of the Forest of Dean or of an open tract at the north of it? The name implies an open wild or forest country, as in the Norwegian 'Dovre Fjeld;' and as in the 'fells' of Cumberland. The modern use of 'field,' ager, had not yet come in. The word for this was accer (1130), as in German also Actr.

918. pearrue] This word is quite a curiosity, to appear here in an Englisc text of the tenth century. It is one of the few Keltic words which continued to hold a place in the language of the Anglo-Saxons. At their first occupation of the country they adopted many words from the older inhabitants. But these borrowings were local, and rarely came to the surface of general literature. This word lay for centuries in obscurity, till it came to light in the modern purk. It still exists in spoken British. In French-Brittany it is the most common word for a small close or paddock near home. Also, in Devonshire, small fields near the farm-house are often named, Little-Park, Great-Park, Higher-Park, &c. See Halliwell's Archaic Dictionary, v. Park. The modern and grandiose use of the word park is apt to mislead us, unless we observe the fundamental idea of a (little) inclosure of ground from the open country. The inclosure is the point in the text; the enemy once in it were as in a trap. There is an interesting parallel in Boethius xviii. 2, where the comparatively small area of the habitable world ($\dot{\eta}$ olkovyáry) is dwelt on. In the previous chapter it was swelce an lytel cafertun like a little court. But in cap. 2. it is on disum lytlum pearroce. I think Förstemann (Ortsnamen, p 83) is mistaken in identifying Park with ahd. pferrich, nhd. pferch=a hurdle, pen for cattle; except in so far as it may have got blended with the Keltic word.

918. p 104. hæfde funden þæt] effecerat ut. In the Lindisfaree Gospels, Matt. xiii. 22, efficitur=gefunden bið.

918. p 104. ætswummon] D has odswymman mihton. The prepositional prefix æt bears here and in some other compounds the notion of escape, exemption, deprivation; they swam away, got away by swimming. So likewise ætbregdan; e. g. Sy dam arleasan ætbroden seo gesihd Godes wuldres is the rendering of Tollatur impius ne videat gloriam Dei (verbally thus: Impio auferatur visio Dei gloriæ), Ælfric, Hom. i. p 300. — ætberstan: ætfleon: ætwindan: e. g. ætfleon ne mihte=could not escape, Joshua x. 35—in Job i. the repeated phrase, "and I only am escaped alone to tell thee," is thus variously rendered in the A. S. version; and ic ana ætbærst þæt ic þe þis cydde ic ana ætwand ic ana ætfleah (Thwaites, Hept. p 165). See also below in the Glossary, vv. ætbærst, ætbræd.

921. p 106 t. Wiginga mere] We must not stray across the country to fix this place, as Gibson does, at Wigmore in Herefordshire. Mr. Thorpe (ap. Flor.) says, "Supposed to be Waymere Castle, on a small island near Bishop's Stortford." This at least keeps to the right side of the map. Yet in his Index to the Saxon Chronicle, Mr. Thorpe has gone back to Wigmore in Herefordshire! If we consider the whole list of fortifications, which Eadweard established between 913 and 924, we see that they must be regarded as a series, and identified with one continuous line of country: Hertford, Witham (Essex), Buckingham, Bedford, Maldon, Towcester, Wigingamere, Huntingdon, Colchester, Stamford, Tamworth, Nottingham, Thelwall, Manchester, Nottingham (the south burg), Bakewell.

921. p 106 h. hlaf mæssan] What the origin of this hlaf is, has puzzled many. Macpherson, in his Ed. of Wyntoun, conjectured that Lammas was curt for "S. Petri ad Vincula mass." This may seem too ingenious to be true, but there is no better explanation as yet. We do find this feast spoken of by the abbreviation of "Ad

Vincula," e. g. in Mr. Shirley's Letters of the Reign of Hen. III., No. xxxiii: "nona die ante Ad Vincula." If this is the derivation, the H and F have come in on a false understanding, and the later form Lammas' is the better.

- 921. p 107 m. wicinga æsc manna] Both translated pirates by Florence: "Quod Dani East-Angliam incolentes graviter ferentes, suamque injuriam ulcisci cupientes, cum piratis quos in auxilium sibi contraxerant ad Mældunam profecti sunt, et eam tamdiu obsidentes impugnabant, quoad Anglis de finitimis locis auxiliarii venissent; quos cum Dani adventare vidissent, ab urbis impugnatione recesserunt. Hoc viso, Angli illos magno impetu persecuti, multa millia et de piratis et de cæteris prostraverunt, reliquos verò fugaverunt."
 - 921. p 107 m. ge wrecan hira teonan] suamque injuriam ulcisci cupientes, Flor. The phrase lived on into the fourteenth century—it is found in the Tale of Gamelyn, which is included in the Canterbury Tales in some editions, but which is somewhat older than Chaucer. "Gamelyn overtook the porter, and his teene wrak." Chaucer, Ed. R. Bell, vol. i. p 249.
 - 921. p 107 l. Passanhamme] "Hodie Pasham in agro Northamtunensi," Gibs. But in A.K. Johnston's General Gazetteer (1850) it is "Passenham, 8 m. S.E. Towcester. It has an entrenchment, supposed to have been raised by Edward the Elder, to defend the passage of the Ouse against the Danes."
 - 922. Howel] This is the favourite name in Welsh history, as Alfred in English. In the Brut y Tywysogion 948, he is described as Howel da, vab Kadell, penn a molyant yr holl Vrytanyeit = Howel the good, son of Cadell, chief and glory of all the Britons.
 - 923. p 110. on ufan hærfest] 'late in the harvest.' Ingram: 'after harvest,' MHB: Florence has simply, autumnali tempore. I am inclined to believe that it means 'before harvest' or 'in the early part of the autumn.' The usual phrase for 'after harvest' would be 'ofer hærfest.'
 - 924. Egper ge Englisce ge Denisce ge Norpmen ge opre] A peculiar interest attaches to this passage because it indicates that the terms 'Denisce' and 'Norpmen' were not equivalents. This feature has not been brought out by the translators with the distinctness which is due to it; save Gibson, who renders with fidelity, "sive Angli, sive Dani, sive Normanni, sive alii [quicunque]:"—whether English or Danish or Northmen or others.
 - 937. p 114 t. cread cnearen flot] This reading of T is corrupt, but the next MSS. give good help. See the foot-notes. I would correct the passage thus: eread enear on flot, i.e. he (the king) thrust out his bark on the deep; crowded his knar a-flost; or, in modern nautical phrase, shoved her off.

The modern idea of crowding is thronging, $\delta_{\chi\lambda\delta s}$ —but at this date it was thrusting onwards, driving forwards, woose woo. In Cod. Exc. 384, 15, we have it in 3rd sing. pres. indic., ponne heah gepring on cleofu cryded=when the high swell dashes on the cliffs. In Norfolk and Suffolk they talk of crowding a wheel-barrow, or, as it is also called, a crowd-barrow. See Forby and Halliwell, in voc. This illustration must not give the word an ignoble aspect, for in early times it is found in dignified associations; as in the text. It occurs three times in Chaucer's Man of Lawes Tale, which is written in the grand style. It figures twice in one stanza containing a majestic apostrophe to the firmament, regarded astrologically as the ruthless engine of human destiny (Tyrwhitt's Ed. l. 4716; Ed. R. Bell, vol. ii. p 16):

O firste moving cruel firmament,
With thy diurnal swegh that croudest ay,
And hurtlest al from Est till Occident,
That naturally wold hold another way;
Thy crouding set the heven in swiche array,
At the beginning of this fierce viage,
That cruel Mars hath slain this mariage.

Further on in the same tale (l. 5221, Ed. Tyrwhitt; p 33, Ed. R. Bell) we find a more exact parallel to our text:

But in the same ship as he hir fond, Hire and hir yonge sone, and all hire gere, He shulde put, and crowde fro the londe, And charge hire, that she never eft come there.

Cnear occurs again on the next page in dat. pl. cnearrum. In both cases it is used of the ships of the Northmen; and in both places the errors of the scribes attest the strangeness of the word. In MS. D, 'nægled cnearrum' is transformed into 'dæggled on garum.' Icelandic knörr and also knarri—navis. See Mr. Dasent's Article in Oxford Essays. In a historian of the eleventh century we get the word in a Latin guise: Ordericus Vitalis, Lib. viii. c. 23, anno 1095, says: Quatuor naves magnæ quas Canardos vocant, de Northwegiå in Angliam appulsæ sunt.

Flot is the right word here, and flod in the next line. The former regards the surface, and is represented by the modern aftoat: the latter regards the aggregate of water, as still in flood.

937. p 115. on dinges mere] Wheloc: in procelloso mari.

But what is 'dinges?' It recalls the onomatopæia of πολυφλοίσβοιο θαλάσσης.

937. p115. Difelin secan] Worsaae (in "Danes and Northmen," p 317) gives a List of Norsk Kings in Dublin, from Lindsay's "Coinage of Ireland," among which is "Anlaf, 934." In the Appendix to "Danes and Northmen" is figured a silver coin, which had before escaped notice, with the legend (as read by the author), "Oolaf i Divielin," i.e. "Olaf in Dublin." He decides that this coin was struck in Dublin in the tenth century. The chief positions of the Danish princes in Ireland, were Dublin, Limerick, and Waterford—the last a town of their own founding. Robertson's Church History, vol. i. p 430.

937. p 115. saluwig padan] Not in apposition to hra (as Thorpe), but of the raven. So in Cædmon, 1443 (p 87. Ed. Thorpe), salwigfedera is used of the raven that Noah sent out of the ark. Compare a striking parallel in Judith, § 11:

res se hlanca gefeah
wulf in walde,
and se wanna hrefn
wæl-gifre fugel;
wistan begen
bæt him öa þeod-guman
bohton tilian
fylle on fægum;
ac him fleah on laste
earn ætes georn, urigfeöera
salowig pada
sang hilde leoö, hyrned nebba.

Thereof fain was the lank wolf in the wold, and the wan raven carnage-fond fowl; wist they both that the sons of men were minded to give them a spread of fate's victims; next in their wake flew eagle corpse-eager, dew-be-gemmed sable-robed he sang battle-pæan, horny-cheeked.

Saluwig-pad-an means one that possesses (-an, nom. -a), a jacket (pad), which is dusky (saluwig).

The word pad appears in Anglo-Saxon nowhere out of composition, but its simple form is found in the kindred dialects. In Gothic it is paida, which occurs five times in the Gospels: also there appears a Gothic verb ga-paidon = ἐνδύεω in Ephesians vi. 14 (Loebe's Glossary to Ulfilas). Other dialectic forms are given in Grimm's Grammar, vol. iii. p 447; among the most interesting is that from the Heliand (a Gospel-Narrative in Old Saxon), in which peda is the word for the seamless coat.

942. Dor] No dowbt the same as above 827, and it may safely be identified with Dore 5 m. from Sheffield. It was probably so called because it was the door or entering in of Northumbria from Mercia, πύλαι. It is associated with "hwitan wylles geat" = Whitewell's gate; and not far from Dore we find Whitewell, and both of them on the verge of the shire. Indeed, this word dor seems to have been used as a common noun for a mountain pass, as we see in Cod. Dipl. 570 (p 79) that in a description of bounds a dor occurs between two brooks, "of secgbroce to Kan hean dore; of hean dore to brydbroce."

scade)] divides, i. e. the waters, and likewise the nations. It is from this word that we have the 'water-shed,' in the sense of a line of division. Physical Geography has lately brought this word forward out of its provincial obscurity. See Wilbraham's Cheshire Glossary, v. Shed; Miss Baker's Northants Glos. v. Sheth. In Wright's Vocabularies, p 183; discrimen, shade of the here. So in Jamieson, to shed hair, is to separate it so that it fall to either side.

942. nyde gebegde] Here we have a case of transition from the verb which was anciently established in this connection, to a substituted modern verb of proximate meaning. The old verb is preserved in BCD. Above 937 x, we have the old verb in A, but the genuine orthography is only found in BCD. The old verb is gebædan=to compel, from an obscure word bad, found only in the compound nyd bad=exaction, toll, compulsory payment. Cod. Dipl. 95; Schmid, v. bad. The verb is found so often with the adverb nyde, that nydegebædan might almost be regarded as a compound = àvayκάζεν. Grein, v. gebædan.

The new verb is gebegan = flectere, transitive of gebugan = to how.

962. man bryne] Contrary to all the translators from Gibson downwards, who understand by this word an epidemic fever, I take it for a great and disastrous fire in London. In many places of Cædmon, bryne is incendium; see Bouterwek. And færbryne = terrible burning of the sun's heat, Cæd. 3001. Mån-bryne is a bad or destructive fire; according to the analogy of mån-bealo, malum perniciosum (Bouterwek).

One cannot but be struck with the singular parallelism between this annal and the events of A. D. 1665, 1666.

963. p 123 m. messe hacel] mass-hackle, i. e. mass-vestment, cope. In the West of England the word hackle is specially used of the conical straw roofing that is put over bee-hives. Also, of the "straw covering of the apex of a rick," says Mr. J. Yonge Akerman, Glossary of Wiltshire Words, v. Hackle.

963. p 123 l. And he macode fyrst pa wealle abutan pone mynstre. geaf hit pa to nama Burch. pe ær het Medeshamstede.]

Though the language here is of the twelfth century, yet this statement is apparently authentic. The great fortifying era in England had been initiated by Edward the son of Alfred. Fortified monasteries became common, and Peterborough was probably one of the earliest instances. Fortification changed the character and the moral aspect of the monastic institution, and the change of name was a natural consequence. The irregular cluster of humble edifices, which shewed like any other "homestead" of the open country, was now encircled with a wall, like one of the fenced cities. Henceforth it is no more Medeshamstede or the Meadow-homestead; but Burh or Burch, the garrison and capital of a dependent region. The fortified place became also the market-place of its district, and hence it reaped commercial advantages, direct and incidental. Laws of Edw. i. 1. Athelst. ii. 12. Cod. Dipl. 575.

963. p 123 last line. and heold ba hwile be he beer wees] What did he hold? Gibson's version is as follows: "easque devexit ad Burch, et consecravit omnes sancto Petro uno die, retinuitque quamdiu ibi esset." The Mon. Hist. Brit. renders, and observed it the while that he was there. Mr. Thorpe, and held it the while that he was there. Plainly Gibson means that he retained possession of the forenamed relics of saints, and did not part with them. The MHB version is equally plain, that Abbot Ælfsi, in succeeding years, made a point of keeping the day of the Translation of the Relics as a highday. Mr. Thorpe's rendering is verbal. Gibson's version appears to me preferable, both as most suitable to the language (as far as anything can be rested on it, where the construction is so lax, as throughout this piece), and also most apposite to the habits of the age in treating relics as merchandize. In adverse times, an embarrassed abbot made ready money of his relics, just as kings of Judah got out of their difficulties by cutting off the gold and silver of the Temple. Ælfsige was not a seller but a buyer of such treasures, when he met with impoverished abbots, as may be read below, anno 1013.

973. on Seere ealdan byrig Acemannes ceastre] I do not think this ancient name for Bath is rightly explained by reference to the sufferings alleviated by the Bath waters, quasi ache-manchester. Ake- seems to be simply a corruption of the Latin Aquæ; like Aix, Ax, Dax (=de aquis), and the German Nachen. Whether the next part -man- meant homo, appears to me highly doubtful. The genitive given to it in the tenth century ('-mannes') must not weigh much with us; any more than the uncritical form in Florence, Acamani civitas. In ancient British, man signified place; and this would make a suitable appendage here.

973. sigora frean] Cf. p 126 m, Sigora waldend. A good deal of doubt hangs over the interpretation of this word sigora. It seems to be a gen. pl., but of what subst. is not clear. The phrase may mean either lord of victors or lord of victories: cf. Bouterwek, Glossar, vv. sigor and sigora.

978. up floran] "Solarium, up flor;" Semi-Saxon Vocabular, Ed. Wright, p 93. Upflora; Ælfric Hom., Ed. Thorpe, vol i p 314: upfleringe, id. pp 296, 314.

979 E. set Corfes geate] This subsequently slid into the sceptation of "the gate of Corfe Castle;" and hence the picture of the arched gateway, and the horseman stabbed while drinking. Gibson, though dissatisfied, could not mend the conventional rendering. He says, "Est autem Corfe castrum vetustum in medio Insula Purbecke dictae, in agro Dorsatensi; cui 'geate' adjectum videtur indicare, Ælfritham Eadweardo Regi insidias struxisse in ipso castri vestibulo, sive via ad castrum ducente." It did not occur to him that there was no Castle there at that time. The name Corfes geat or Corf geat (F) signifies the singular cut or cleft in the line of chalk hills, wherein Corfe Castle has since been pitched, on a minor eminence. The 'geat' is a gate, not of art, but of nature; as above 942, 'hwitanwylles geat.'

982 C. Sarcena] This is not the earliest mention of the Saracens in Saxon literature. See Bede's E. H. v. 23, where the genitive plural is Sarcina.

991. † man geald errest gafol Deniscan mannum] This tallies exactly with the dates of Anglo-Saxon money found in Denmark and Sweden; in both which countries it has been exhumed in large quantities, but especially in Sweden. The dates range from Æbelred to Edward Conf.; and coins of some of the intermediate reigns have been found in Denmark and Sweden in larger numbers than in England. Anglosachsiska Mynt i Svenska Kongl: Mynthabinettet af Bror Emil Hildebrand. 4to., Stockholm, 1846.

992. gif hi muhton bone here ahwær utene betræppan] v. l. utan betreppan C D; gif man mihte betræppan bane here ahwar wibutan F. Cf. Ælfrici Colloquium (Thorpe's Analecta, p 25), where the bird-catcher takes birds mid treppan=decipulä. The project was to environ the hostile force by surprise. Florence says, "ut, si quo modo possent, Danorum exercitum in aliquo portu circumvallando comprehenderent." And Henry of Hunt-

utene is not to be joined with ahwær=anywhere without (Ingram), anywhere abroad (Thorpe), as if utene meant "out at sea," "out on their cruise," "out about the coasts"—but it goes almost into one word with betræppan=to take or catch the foe by surrounding him on the outside. utene-betræppan, or (better) utan-betreppan, is to beleaguer. Florence had the same Saxon before him as we have, and he renders it word for word fully and faithfully. ahwær=in aliquo portu: utene=circumvallando: betræppan=comprehenderent. MHB's "anywhere betrap the army about" is admirable. utan (utene) is εξωθεν, not εξω. See the Glossary, v. utan.

994. and hi ahredde] and rescued them. We retain this verb in our Bible; "rid me and deliver me out of great waters." Ps. cxliv. 7, 11, and lxxxii. 4.

994. ÆSelward ealdorman] This is supposed to be the historian "Patricius Consul Fabius Quæstor Æthelwerdus." See MHB in Pref. p 81.

Iste fuit prudens valde, ita ut illo in tempore nullus sapientior haberetur is Anglia. Recedente itaque inde rege, Ælfricus pergit Doroberniam. Ubi cum venisset, receptus est, a tali ordine clericorum, a quo minus vellet. Cogitavit igitur et multum secum tractans, quali modo possit eicere eos, quos sciebat in Ecclesia Christi injuste mansisse. Ut supra diximus, valde fuit prudens, et ecclesiasticis disciplinis plurimum instructus. Itaque præcepit congregari omnes quos sciebat prudentiores per totam Angliam, et maxime senes. Ad quem cum pro reverentia viri festinanter venissent, requisivit ab eis si quid aut ipsi a suis antecessoribus de Ecclesia Christi Cantiæ audissent, aut ipsi in aliquo loco legissent, quis ordo in prædicta ecclesia Deo servire debuisset, clericorum aut monachorum aut quis eo tempore postquam Augustinus Angliam ingresset, ibi locatus esset in initio. Ipse vero multa a multis antea inde audivit, et in libris legit. Tusc seniores et prudentiores narraverunt ei, quod inde a suis patribus audissent. Postquam Deus, inquiunt, per beatum Augustinum aperuit cor regis Ædelberti ad suscipiendam fidem Christi, ipse Augustinus elegit sibi sedem in civitate Dorobernia quæ erat caput totius regni Ædelberti regis, ubi invenit quoddam opus inceptum Romano opere, quod auxiliante rege statuit perficere. Quod dum perfectum esset rex Ægelbertus cœpit consilium quærere ab Augustino et a cæteris consiliariis suis, quem ordinem monachorum vel clericorum convenientius in illa ecclesia ad serviendum Deo constituere potuisset. Qui omnes dederunt consilium, ut rex ex sua parte mitteret nuntios suos, et Augustinus monachos suos cum nuntiis regis Romæ, ad papam Gregorium, et ejus consilio sicut antea idem Augustinus venit in Angliam, ita et ecclesia jam nominata dedicaretur et ordinaretur. Quod et factum est. Nam rex statim paratis nuntiis suis, misit Romæ, et Augustinus nichilominus suos. Cum autem venissent ad papam, et nuntiassent quod Angli suscepissent fidem Christi, gavisus est valde. Auditis itaque omnibus quæ a rege et Augustino mandata fuerant, statim remisit nuntios, cum quibus hos viros misit Augustino ut essent ei in adjutorium ad fidem Christi confirmandam; Mellitum, Justum, Paulinum, Rufinianum. Per istos etiam misit Augustino pallium, atque in quo loco deberet episcopos co-ordinare, et ponere mandavit; ecclesiam quoque quam fecerat in honorem Jhesu Christi, et S. Mariæ matris ejus, præcepit dedicari, ejusdemque ordinis quo ipse Augustinus, et alii quos ipse sibi misit, erant, in eadem ecclesia ad serviendum Deo ponere, sibique ibidem sedem archiepiscopalem et omnibus successoribus suis statuere, omnesque archiepiscopos sibi succedentes monachos esse debere, ex parte Dei viventis, et beati Petri, et ex sua, et omnium successorum præcepit. Cum autem nuntii reversi, venissent ad regem, et ad Augustinum, gaudio maximo repleti sunt pro tali mandato. Tunc Augustinus festinanter dedicavit ecclesiam illo die quo festum sanctorum Primi et Feliciani, v. Idus Junii, habetur, posuitque in ea monachos sicut papa mandavit; et ex ipsis ordinabantur episcopi per Angliam sicut ipse legisti in Ystoria Anglorum. Itaque cum ista Ælfricus archiepiscopus audisset, et tales testes habuisset, qui illo tempore maxime in consilio regis erant, gaudio repletus est. Addiderunt adhuc prædicti viri: Ita sicut diximus, permanserunt monachi in ecclesia Christi Cantuariæ, tempore Augustini, Laurentii, Melliti, Justi, Honorii, Deusdedit, Theodorii, Brihtwaldi, Tatwini, Nothelmi, Cuthberti, Bregwini, Janberti, Athelhardi, Wulfredi, Feologildi. Illo vero primo anno quo Chelnodus suscepit archiepiscopatum Cantiæ tanta mortalitas facta est, ut in Ecclesia Christi non remanerent nisi v. monachi, et ideo pro tali necessitate idem C. archiepiscopus accepit de clericis suis preshiteros, qui quousque restauraret ecclesiam monachis, juvarent paucos monachos qui remanserunt. Nunc autem est in potestate regis et tua, si diutius vultis ut ibi clerici . . maneant, quia postquam pro tali necessitate ibi positi sunt, non potuerunt levius eici quam modo. Tunc archiepiscopus cum magna festinatione cum his omnibus quos secum ibi habebat, perrexit ad regem Ægelbertum, et indicavit ei per ordinem hæc omnia. Tunc dixit accepto consilio rex: Hoc videtur mihi melius consilium, ut eatis Romæ pro pallio vestro, et indicetis apostolico omnia, et secundum suum consilium per omnia fieri concedo. Dixerunt omnes optimum esse consilium regis. Archiepiscopus autem paratis rebus suis perrexit Romam. Statim vero ut clerici audierunt consilium regis, paraverunt duos ex ipsis qui irent Romæ, portantes secum multum auri et argenti, quod darent papæ pro pallio. Sed nuntii archiepiscopi præcesserunt. Nam cum clerici pervenerunt ad papam, respondit se nolle illorum verba suscipere, quia nullum signum nec a rege nec a populo terræ secum haberent. Discedentibus clericis, venit archiepiscopus ad papam, qui suscepit eum cum magno honore. In crastino fecit eun cième missam ad altare beati Petri, et ipse impossit ei proprium pallium sum (n hec ita facta essent, archiepiscopus cœpit dicere papæ de clericis, et de leis Christi sicut supradictum est, et papa ei de clericis quomodo venerint si en quod obtulerunt sibi magnam pecuniam pro pallio; et adjecit papa: Bair i Angliam cum benedictione Dei, et Sancti Petri, et in ecclesia tibi comenta ejusdem ordinis in ea ponite quem papa Gregorius Augustino precept, e le tibi precipio ex parte Dei et beati Petri, et nostra. Tunc archiepiscos rediit. Cum autem revertisset in Angliam, statim adiit ecclesiam sum, e se adiit regem, et letatus est rex, et omnis Anglia, de reditu suo et quoi se secundum voluntatem regis peregit. Post hacc reversus ad acdem suam, e se clericis, locavit ecclesiam monachis sicut papa illum imperaverat, secundum et B. Gregorius precepit Augustino facere in primordio ecclesiæ. F Lot.

997. Penwiht steort] steort, tail, is the Saxon addition. The Keltic name is represented by Penwiht, which C gives Penwik, at D Penwsed. The latter appears nearest to the Welsh, from the following passage of the Brut y Tywysogion: "King Henry collected an army against Gwynedd and Powys o'r van eithiaf o Gyrnyn ke gelwir Pengwayd, hyt y vann eithiaf o Brydyn lle gelwir Penblathaus; i.e. from the land's end of Cornwall, which is called Pengwayd, to the land's end of Prydyn, which is called Penblathaun.

1001. Tegntun] Locus in agro Devoniensi; sed è plurius in isto agro hujus appellationis locis, quis sit nescio (Gibson). Ost among many instances of his scrupulous fidelity. His successors. Ingram and MHB, retained the name unaltered in their translation; but Mr. Thorpe has tacitly given it as Teignmouth, first in his Translation of Lappenberg (vol. ii. p 162), and since in his Edition of the Chronicles for the Master of the Rolls. Both name and site speak for Kingsteignton, three miles up the estuary of the Teign.

Peon h6] Now Pinho, three miles N. E. of Exeter, and a favourite walk with residents of the western capital. It is near the Clists, one of which is here indicated by the name 'Glistune.'

The composition of the name Peon ho is tautological; the latter being a Saxon translation of the former part, which is British. Gibson (strangely) confounded it with æt Peonnum, 658.

1903. gebræd he hine seocne] feigned he himself sick: cf. Lazamon, vol. i. p 284, þe king hine breid seac.

1004. ac hi abruson ba se he to bohte] "but they in whom he trusted failed to do it," MHB; "but they whom he trusted in failed him," Thorpe. This passage may help to justify the reading of the manuscript of Lagamon (vol. i. p 82. Ed. Madden):

al heo tileden ase heo to bohten

= they tilled whatever they set their minds on—where the Editor has a ruggested an emendation. 1006. p 140 m. Da hit winter leohte] winter læhte C D. When it became winterly or winterish. This verb seems to be formed from an adj. winterlie; sumorlæcan from sumorlic, &c. So in OHG, nalihhon, ga-ebanlichon are ranged by Graff under Lih=similis. But se does not often present itself as an alterate of i; and Grimm is embarrassed by the unconformability of the verbs in læcan. Deutsche Grammatik, vol. ii. pp 110 and 283.

To this list may be added from the Vocabularies (Ed. Wright, p 54), "Venusto, ic cyrtenlæce:" cf. Ettmüller's Lex. p 386. Also, geþryst læhte] in the fragment of Zosimas, p 104, l. 17, in the Appendix to my Swishun. Ettmüller (Lex. p 184) gives wiserlæcan = privare; but I cannot verify his reference.

roo6. p 140 m. to his fry stole to Wihtlande] C D omit the second to; F has, to his frip stole into Wiht; ad Asylum nempe Vectam (Gibson). A metaphorical use of fris stol is found also in the Paris Psalter, Ps. lxxix. 1, xciii. 21: and of fris stow, Ps. xvii. 1; where the Latin version has, in all three cases, refugium. The literal fris stol was a seat in a privileged 'sanctuary.' "In several English churches there was a stone seat beside the altar, for those who fled to the peace of the church. One of these still remains at Beverley, another at Hexham. To violate the protection of the frið stol was not to be compensated by a pecuniary penalty; it was bot-leas." Prof. Cosmo Innes, Scotland in the Middle Ages, p 195. The frið stol in Hexham Abbey would grace a more advanced position—if one may criticise arrangements which appear to be ruled by good taste and good feeling.

1006. p 140 m. to heora garwan feorme] There is a bitter pleasantry about this, of which the point is, that the pirates regarded the well-stored farms of Berkshire and Hampshire as so much provisions laid up for their own winter entertainment. It is not easy to devise a modern form of words which shall reflect the spirit here manifested—it is somewhat of this kind: at Christmas they made a progress to those hospitable quarters where they knew they were always welcome.

1006. p 140 m. Cwicchelmes hlæwe] E. S. E. of Wantage is "Cuckhamsley Hill or Cuchinslow, a large barrow on a wide plain overlooking White Horse Vale." Gough's Camden, i. 225. In Cod. Dipl. 693, we have a scirgemot æt Cwicelmes hlæwe.

beotra gylpa] This would have been in the text of E but for an accidental omission, which has been supplied in the foot-note from C. It is a genuine Saxon idiom = out of insolent bravado. It is a sort of genitive absolute, a good example of which may be seen in a Charter communicated by the late Mr. Kemble to the Archæological Journal, No. 53 (1857), p 60; ungebetra þinga = without having mended matters.

and sona pet wærod on fleame gebrohtan] J hi Sar þ Englisce folc a fleame brohtan F.

1008. This tantalizing annal prompts a conjecture that the annalist had access to public accounts which he cared little to understand, and contented himself by making a hasty extract. The formality of the paragraph, with its videlicet (β is bonne)—the āπαξ λεγόμενο scegŏ—the allusion in the next annal to books which can hardly mean published books—might thus be accounted for.

In this rating of land for raising a navy, the numbers are so unconformable to the statistical numbers preserved elsewhere, and so incommensurate with each other, that they must be received with suspicion. All the texts agree, except D, which, of all extant texts, is probably the nearest to the source. In the confusion of the text of D, may possibly be found materials for a future emendation.

But, taken at its worst, the annal is rich in interest. We learn the curious fact, that it was incumbent on each of the landed subdivisions, to provide the king with a ship and its armour. The government did not levy ship-money, but required each county to find its quota of ships. This would apply as well to the inland districts, as to those on the sea-bord. And here we find the explanation of an otherwise inexplicable bequest of good Abp. Ælfric, who died two years before this date. He gave one ship to the folk of Kent, and one to Wiltshire. The will is in Cod. Dipl. 716. Doubtless, in each of the cases, the bequest was intended as an alleviation of the heavy imposts under which the people groaned. His gift being to the shire, is an argument that the assessment was by shires. It appears to me probable that each shire had to furnish one ship for every three Hundreds contained in the shire. Thus a shire containing thirty Hundreds would have to furnish ten ships. (Accordingly, D may be right: of prym hund scipum:?=of three Hundreds, Sundertschaften.) This burden would fall upon the whole body of the people, according to their rating. But the wealthy landowners had a special burden besides. He who had property up to or over the extent of ten hides, would have to furnish a scent and every thane under ten hides, had to furnish a helmet and breastplate.

feastlice] fæstlice CD; intente Flor.

scegt] Wright's Vocabularies, p 47, Scapha vel trieris, litel scip vel sceigt; p 56, Trieris sceit; p 63, Trieris scægt. See Schmid, Glos. v. Sceitman; and Cod. Dipl. 755, Winsig scægtman. This word appears to have been borrowed from the Northmen: Skeit, navis cursoria, Egilsson.

1009. p 143. lencten] Here it is seen by the relation in which Lencten stands to Winter, that the original sense is not Lent, but Spring; as Lenz, still used in poetic German:

Und Lenz wird kommen, Und Winter wird gehn.

Wilhelm Müller's "Trockne Blumen."

And this is the sense in which it entered into 'Lent-lilies,' Old English (now provincial) for daffodils.

In like manner hærfest originally meant autumn, like the German Herbst.

1011. p 145. p wees un assecgendlic enigum menn] inenarrabile verò cuiquam (Gibson); it was impossible for any men [man] to say (Ingram).

respling] This rare word occurs but this once in the Saxon Chronicles. It is found in Genesis xxxix. 20; Ps. lxviii. 38, Ed. Spelman: in both cases of prisoners, vincti. Above in the same page is respton from respan=ζωγρεῦν, they seized, took captive. See the family of words in Ettm. p 267, who connects it with rap, rops. Henry of Huntingdon has caught up the sound of this lament: Videres autem spectaculum horrendum, faciem urbis antique et pulcherrime totam in cineres redactam, caput fidei fontemque doctrine Anglorum vinculis mancipatum opprobriose pertrahi.

1012. hryvera] "Horned beasts are still designated in Dorset, and in other parts of England, Rother Cattle; likewise in Stat. 3 and 4 Edw. vi. c. 19, mention is made of 'Rother beastes, as oxen, steres, noutes, kyen, heighfers and calves.' Piers Ploughman describes the husbandman driving his team of foure rotheren." Archaeological Journal, 1860, p 157.

martyred at Greenwich, whither he had been conveyed from Canterbury by Sandwich. An old triforium window in the north choir aisle of Canterbury Cathedral represents, in three compartments, the story of Elphege: 1. The siege; 2. The embarking at Sandwich: 3. The martyrdom at Greenwich, when Thrum, whom the Abp. had baptized, put him out of pain by a blow of his axe ('impietate piá').

Elphege is buried in the Cathedral at Canterbury on the N. side of the ascent of steps towards the high altar, under the spot where now is the altar-tomb of the late Archbishop Hooley. Opposite to Elphege, at the other end of the same steps, is the resting-place of Dunstan, where are still remains of the fret-work of his shrine. In the midst of the ascent is the site of the grave of Odo, predecessor of Dunstan

The scene of the martyrdom was Greenwich, and probably the very site on which Greenwich church stands;—they would no doubt have wished to plant the church on the identical spot, and would have taken pains to ascertain it. The church is dedicated to St. Ælfheah. See Osborn's Life of Alphege in Anglia Sacra 147; also Acta Sanctorum, Ap. 19 and 21.

'time,' so much as favourable circumstance, occasion, opportunity, καιρός. The word seems to be at home in the North, where byrr is vestus secundus (Egilsson), and analogous in its derivative meanings to οδρος. Connected with this is the Norsk impers. verb mer byrjar, me decet; and the corresponding Saxon hit gebyrat, it is seasonable, appropriate. The only other case of byre, which I find in Saxon, is in the Lay of Byrhtnot 121, Ed. Grein: Thorpe's Analecta, p 135, ba he byre hæfde=when he had opportunity.

1014. Candel mæssan] The Purification, February 2. For the history of this Festival, which is not one of the ancient ones, but traced back only to the times of Justin or Justinian, sixth century.

see Suicer, v. Υπαπαντή: Bingham. Bp. Sparrow, A Rationale of the Book of Common Prayer, quotes S. Bernard for the Procession and Candles. This last feature has stamped the day in several modern languages; in French, La Fête de la Chandeleur. And in Swedish I find kyndilmüsso (Bonaventuras Betraktelser, cap. 10).

1016. Creecilade Above 905, in the older form, Creeca gelade. The second part is lad, golad, a ford or ferry, a passage of a river. It is seen in the sister-name of Lechlade, and other names in Gloucestershire, as S. Mary Lode, Abload, Evenlode, Framilode. The first part, which is now shrunk up to Crick-, is probably Cerrig. the British word for stone, which is still an important element in names, not only in Ireland, Scotland, and Wales, but also in England and France. In Ireland the common form is Carrick, e.g. Carrickfergus &c., also Creagh; in Scotland, Craig, e.g. Craigmillar &c., or Craw, as Crawford; in Wales, Cerrig, Craig, Crick, e.g. Crickhowel (i. e. Howel's stone) &c. In England we have Crichton, Crick House, Craik (Co. Durham), repeated instances of Crawley, Cray, Creake, which occur in divers counties. In France there is " La Crau" near Arles, which is the Aidades or Stony Plain of Strabo Camden was the first to point out this derivation: . . . "Gallis hodie la Craux dicitur. Nominis tamen rationem nesciunt, at lapides Craig Britannica lingua nominantur."

1016. p154. eall be westan] This phrase filled out full, would stand thus—"be westan dæle;" and Gibson has rendered it excellently, per plagam occidentalem. Of the English translators, none has surpassed Ingram's "all by west"—the later version of MHB and Thorpe, "all to the west," being no improvement.

1016. p155. Georius] Georgius C D; Georgies F. Concerning S. George, an Anglo-Saxon Poem of about this date, or a little later, was edited by Mr. Hardwick for the Percy Society, 1850. The Preface shews that this Saint was well known in Saxon times, and that his celebrity did not rise out of the Crusades. But his quality of Patron-Saint of England does date from that period.

gang dagum. The Rogation days before Ascension Day, in which litanies were sung in procession round the fields. The petition of the litanies was for the kindly fruits of the earth. This is the going to which the etymology of the word points. A faint image of the procession still survives in the annual custom of beating the parish bounds at this season.

1016. p 156. set Sceorstane] ".... in Wiccia, in loco qui Scearstan nominatur, Flor.; i.e. (interprete Camdeno) Comitatus lapis.

Putatur enim lapis esse terminalis qui quatuor Comitatus, Osoniensen, Glocestrensem, Wigorniensem, et Warwicensem distinguit" (Gibson). Mr. Thorpe ap. Flor. Wigorn. ad loc. has an ingenious method for bringing about an identification of this place with Chimney in Oxfordshire.

Englabeade] = There Knut was victorious and conquered all the English nation. In D it stands 'gefeath him wib ealle,'—to the confusion of the sense. A new hand begins at 'gefeatht' in the middle of the sentence, and hence probably the error.

1016. p 159. and ba cyningas comon togædere æt Olanige Here the manuscript D has a noticeable amplification: set Olanige. wið Deorhyrste, and wurden feelagan and wedbroors, and best gefæstnodon &c. The locality is still more distinctly indicated by Florence: . . . ambo reges, ad locum qui Deorhyrst nominatur, in unum convenerunt: Eadmundus cum suis in occidentali ripl Sabrinæ, Canutus verd in orientali cum suis consedit. rex in insulam quæ Olanege appellatur, et est in ipsius fluminis medie sita, trabariis advehitur; ubi pace amicitia fraternitate, et pacto et sacramentis confirmata, regnum dividitur. Gibson says, "Hodie The Eight, insula in agro Glocestrensi, quam Sabrinæ fluminis aquæ sese diffindentes efficient." There is hardly any doubt that it is Alney Island, close to the city of Gloucester; whether this be The Eight of Gibson or not. Either the description "near Deerhyrst" must be a mistake, or "Deerhyrst" must be other than the place of that name near Tewksbury. The MS. D and Florence are too nearly allied to strengthen each other's statement.

This meeting of Cnut and Edmund is represented as a duel by a great majority of later historians. Sharon Turner gives the following list of authorities for the duel: Henry of Huntingdon; Matthew of Westminster; The Peterborough Chronicle, ap. Sparke; Knvghton; Brompton; Higden; Rieval; Radulf Niger (MS. Vesp. D. 10, p 25); Anglo-Saxon History, vol. iii. p 267, note 13. In Malmesbury and the Encomium Emmæ, Cnut is said to have declined battle. The following authorities make no mention of duel or challenge: Saxon Chronicles; Florence; Simeon of Durham; Hoveden; Knytlinga Saga.

It became in the course of time one of the established sensation scenes of History. Speed, Baker, and Grafton describe the wager of battle circumstantially, with stand-up speeches, after the manner of the early books of Livy. Camden adopts the Monomachia. Hume does not notice it. Turner relates it with a precise comparison of authorities. Lingard introduces it guardedly thus: "To account for the final success of Canute, it was said that the two kings fought in single combat in the Isle of Olney, &c. &c."

The question was elaborately stated and examined by Mr. Hogg in the Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature, vol. v., New Series; and the conclusion was in favour of the Single Combat. This view is moreover supported by the Rev. S. Lysons of Hempsted Court, the Archæologist of Gloucestershire, to whom I am indebted for many curious particulars in illustration of the locality.

The name of the island in which the kings met, is found in a late historian spelt Holenghege, and this has seemed to countenance the combat view. The Northmen had a custom, when great issues were to be decided by single combat, to choose for the arena a riverisland, to which the principals repaired, accompanied only by their seconds, while the other supporters waited the event on the opposite banks. This was called Holm-gang, Island-going. Mr. Hogg and others, who support the combat view, see in the late form Holenghege some touch of this Holm-gang. But it is really only an aspirated form of spelling Olanige or Alney.

Another circumstance has been urged as bearing upon the question. The strand of the Severn, opposite to the Island, is now called Coggins, and was temp. Edw. I. known as Cockayne; a word which Du Cange renders querelle, disputation, contention. But perhaps this spot, which lay between the Castle of Gloucester and the river, was the public exercising ground, and thus the continual scene of an emulative 'contention.' (But cf. Mr. Lysons in Gent. Mag., June 1861, p 631.)

It appears to me that the combat owes its existence in history to a single expression in the Saxon Chronicles, viz. comon togædere. There is no doubt from the context that the intention of the Saxon Chronicler is to relate an amicable conference. But in employing the words comon togædere he inadvertently gave occasion for a misunderstanding, inasmuch as this is also used (like ὁμόσε lέναι) of hostile meetings: cf. 992, 1001, p 158. Orosius, p 416. Ed. Thorpe: iv. 10. § 2. Ed. Bosworth. In the Coke's Tale of Gamelyn, l. 236, "Whan Gamelyn and the champioun togider gon to goon."

1021*. D alone adds, And Ælfgar b'. se ælmes fulla forð ferde on Cristes mæsse uhtan.

1022. swa se papa him tente] instructed can hardly be the word for this place, as the later translators have rendered it. It sounds too much like partisanship in the judge.

Better follow Gibson: "et ipsum ab omni crimine purgavit, cujus

(ut à Papa didicerat) fuerat insimulatus, testante Archiepiscopo, et toto comitatu qui apud eum aderat."

But this is not satisfactory. The word teehte, if it signify any help that Leofwine obtained from the Pope, it can only be help in the way of directions as to the requisite process for his clearance. We should thus say, "as the Pope directed or enjoined him." And this sense seems to be borne out by Cod. Dipl. 693, where the word is thus used once if not twice. The only other possible meaning seemed to be "as the Pope pronounced to him, in the presence of &c.," viz. that he had successfully cleared himself.

1025. to ba holme set ea beere halgan] The river-name "Helge-Aa" is here translated, "at the holy river." This river is now in Sweden, with the town of Christianstad on one of its lakes. But it was then the boundary between Sweden and the Danish possessions, and was accordingly liable to witness conflicts between Danish and Swedish leaders.

But the accuracy of this record has been questioned because of a more famous disaster for Cnut which took place two years later than this date. In 1027 king Olaf of Norway discomfited Cnut's navy by an ingenious stratagem at the river "Helge-Aa." The similarity between the two events has led to the suspicion that they have grown out of one. Yet there are some distinct features in this entry, which speak for its genuineness. There is the 'holm,' and the names of the leaders on the Swedish side, Ulf and Eglaf, which Munch finds agreeable to the Swedish history of the time. This is not "Ulf Iarl," brother-in-law of Cnut—but Ulf and Eglaf were two sons of Ragnvald Iarl, who had been in the service of the king of Sweden. Munch's Norske Folk's Historie, vol. ii. pp 733-735.

- 1028. ge ahnode him bet lande] vindicated to himself that land, made good his claims. This is the proper meaning of the verb; see apposite quotations in Schmid, Glos. vv. agnian, agnung: Grein, vv. agnian, geagnian. Cf. Cod. Dipl. 693. Cnut had hereditary claims to the sovereignty of Norway.
 - 1031 A. Her com Cnut agan] Cf. Luke xix. 15.
- abstractâ, Flor. In Cnut's Laws, repeated theft is punishable by certain mutilations, and among these heettian, a word which Grimm did not know and would have altered: cf. Schmid, v. hættian and v. Strafen. His quotation from Cod. Colb. leaves little room for doubt: corium capitis cum capillis (auferatur) quod Angli dicunt behættie. It would be connected with Germ. haut=skin; our hide.

1036. p 165. ongean wealcan] contra moliri; as Ettm. Lex. p 78, who prints the two words in one, as a compound. The old High German preserves the elementary idea of this word in Walkan = volvere, q. v. in Graff. Above, p 95 m, unwealtran = unrolling-er, is from a collateral form, with T instead of C. In Ælfric's Homilies, vol. i. p 448 m, weolc the preterite, in the transferred sense of revolving in the mind. Here it is of bringing a powerful agitation to bear on a political question, for which the word was well prepared by the familiar phrase, you gowealc, fluctuum volutatio, the rolling swell of the waves. See reff. in Bouterwek, Glos. Cædm. To the same effect F says, Godwine eorl and ealle &a betstan men on Westsexan wiscowædon. ac hi naht ne gespeddan. and he was ha fullice cing ofer eal Englaland.

1036. Englalandes * * him and his brover] Though the MS. shews no lacuna here, there is reason to suspect one. Malmesbury's text is here akin to ours, and he supplies the sentence of which we have only the latter end in E: "Angli diu obstiterunt; magis unum ex filiis Ethelredi, qui in Normannia morabatur, vel Hardecnutum filium Cnutonis ex Emma, qui tunc in Denemarchia erat, regem habere volentes."

the nom. must be hamule, hamele; at first perhaps signifying a rowlock-strap, and so symbolizing some subdivision of the crew. There is not money enough to give eight marcs to every rower. Cf. Ettm. p 466. Egilsson, v. Hamla.

1040. of weallande] from abroad, from foreign parts, from exile. See note, page 65, and below on 1048, p 178 m.

1046. p173. be se cyng him geunnen hæssde] him is sibimetipsis, to them the pleaders, Harold and Beorn, who urged that Swegen must not be invested with any of the things (offices or possessions) which the king had already granted away to themselves. The expressions of C are more distinct.

1050 D. p 173. and se cyng ha sende æfter ham scypum he he ofsendan mihte. he ær ham wendon] and the king then sent after such ships as he could overtake (of those) which recently went home.

1046. p 174 t. Da scyfte man Harold eorl up bæs cynges scipe be Harold eorl ær steorde] The confusion of this passage will be remedied if we suppose the first Harold to be an error for Beorn.

1046. p 174. tealde] This and tealdon (1086) are to be noted as probably the earliest extant instances of their use in a sense identical with the modern 'tell, told.' Before this the verb tellan is used for "to count numerically, to enumerate, to account as &c.;" but it is a step in the history of the word when it appears as the mere equivalent of "to say." It seems less like a development in direct line, than an introduction from a collateral dialect, or from provincial or colloquial usage. Yet telle, tellanne in 1085, where the sense is to recount, nurrate, may represent the connecting link.

1048. p 178 t. to- beere burge -weard] When we call this Tmesis, as we were taught to do in reading Homer, we speak prapostere, inversely to the order of facts. We are familiar with toward as one word, and therefore we regard it as a severance of that which has been coherent, when we find it written as two words. Here, we see that the two parts have become coherent as a consequence of their being frequently brought near together. We still keep them apart in certain phrases, as, to the east ward-from the north ward—where the practice of writing east-ward, north-ward, as compounds, is a mistake of the syntax. Examples from the Authorized English Bible are given in my Switchun, p 115. To those may be added, wio heofenas weard, Ælf. i. p46. 296; to mynetre weard, id. p 336; wib Petres weard, id. 376. An example of older growth is the compound preposition between, which we only just catch a glimpse of in its earlier state, in the poetical phrase be seem twoonum = between seas. The accidental and local character of this compound is seen in the fact, that the analogue in Dutch and German is simple, viz. tusschen, zwischen=tween.

1048. p 178 h. of seende] Not 'sent off,' but 'sent for, sent after,' μετεπέμψατο. Compare Lazamon, vol. ii. p 235, bat he ofsende Magan, h wes a selcut mon, i. e. that he should send for Magan, who was a marvellous man. Again, p 324 (where we accept the Editor's emendation as unquestionable), ofsender biscopes, and boc-ilarede men, i. e. send for bishops, and book-learned men. The renderings are Sir Frederic Madden's. Cf. Ælf. Hom. i. p 400, 'of-arn Sone begen Naaman' = ran after the thane Naaman. So in our text, above p 08 t, 'ne mehte hine mon of ridan' = they were not able to ride him down, to overtake him, equitando assequi. Gen. xiv. 13, and efste wid bees heres of h he hig of rad' = and pursued the army till he overtook them. The verb ofahsian (or ofaxian) is interesting. Meaning etymologically 'to ask after, enquire;' it came like murbareobas to mean 'get information, be told, learn, hear of;' and in 1016 (p158) C and D have ofahsade (ofaxade) where E and F have geherds seogan, heard say. Cf. below, notes on 1050 D; and on 1008, ' of eode.'

`1048. p 178 h. soeolde] This verb has here a force still known in the dialects, and in high activity in German. It characterises the statement as being merely the version of Eustace.

1048. p 178 m. pa welisce menn] This means simply "the foreigners;" as also below, pa weelisce men: in both cases indicating the Normans or Frenchmen. See note, p 65, and on 1040. In Devonshire the walnut is called 'French nut,' in Somersetshire it is 'Welsh nut,' but the signification is the same in the two cases, both alike meaning foreign nut. At the time when the English name of the juglans was fixed in Somersetshire, the current word for foreign was Welsh—when, at a later date, it was fixed in Devonshire, the common adjective for foreign was French, which it may almost be said to be still.

1048. p 180 h. ealra þæra þegna] Qu. þinga?

1048 E. ad fin. Oddan] He is named again p 182, and his death is recorded 1056 D with a character. There is a slab among the Arundel marbles at Oxford, which was found in 1675 near Deerhurst Church in Gloucestershire. It bears the following inscription in letters of Saxon times:

PA ODDA DVX IVSSIT HANC
REGIAM AVLAM CONSTRVI
ATQVE DEDICARI IN HONORE S- TRINITATIS PRO ANIMA GERMANI SVI ELFRICI QVE DE HOC
LOCO ASVPTA EALDREDVS VERO
EPS QVI EANDEM DEDICAVIT II IDIBVS APL XIIII AVTEM ANNOS REGNI EADWARDI REGIS ANGLORV.

The death of the said Ælfric, brother of Odda, is recorded 1053 D (p 189). The quaintnesses of the inscription are partially reproduced in Parker's Glos. of Architecture, Companion, p 26.

1052. p 183 h. hasæton] rowers. Norsk hásætan: cf. Mr. Dasent's Article on Iceland, in Oxford Essays.

1052. p 183 m. wandode] he hesitated not, was not shy of, shrunk not from, the risk of foraging: cf. Gospels, Matt. xxii. 16, bu ne wandast for nanum menn: bid um Riemand tummerst. De Wette.

1052. p 185. Nore musan] Nothing has been done for the identification of this place since Gibson: Hodie, opinor, ostium Medwægi quod vocatur the buon in the Nowre. Putarem esse North-Forland nisi mus adjiceretur, quod semper ostium designat. Ingram: the Nore. Later Editors, verbally, Northmouth.

1052. p 185. to Middeltune pees cynges] This can be no other than the ancient town of Milton (Royal), situated on "Milton Creek," landward of the Isle of Sheppey. The associations at 892 and 894 shew that the Middeltun there is also the same place, viz in Kent. Gibson says, 'Middleton in Essex;' but I cannot find any such place that is passable here.—The Middeltun of 964 is Milton Abbas, near Blandford, Dorset: "Ibi enim hujus nominis locus est, ubi vetusti cœnobii parietes conspiciuntur, quod Æthelstanus Rex fundavit, ut fratris sui manes expiaret" (Gibson). A document, No. 375 in Kemble's Cod. Dipl., appertaining to this foundation, is of later date, and otherwise suspicious-looking.

ship. The simple adj. is wreest=firm, steady, secure; (Ettmüller, Lexicon, p 155) as in the paraphrased Psalter, Ps. li. 6, on his welan spede wreeste getruwode=in the multitude of his riches he firmly trusted. Other examples in Bouterwek, Glos. v. vreest. Unwreest occurs in E three times. The second time is at p 220 b, where it is used morally: "Alas, how delusive and insecure (unwrest) is this world's riches!" In the third place, p 260 t, Abbot Henry is represented as searching for some device which shall never profit him: an unwreste wrenc=some lame pretence, or bootless, desperate imposture. At Lazamon's date, this forcible adj. retained only the faded and vague sense of poor, wretched, weak, wicked; and from the repeated blunders of the scribes in writing the word, it appears almost obsolete in the thirteenth century: cf. Madden's Glossary to Lazamon, v. unwreest; and White's Ormulum, Glos. v. unnwreeste.

From Grosseteste's "Castell of Loue," I am enabled, by the kindness of Mr. Weymouth, who is engaged in editing it, to cite the line, "And for vre speche vnwreste and vyl" (l. 1149). In some other instances one of his manuscripts has rejected the word as obsolete. Instead of vnwreste (l. 335) the said manuscript substitutes gret synne—vnwresteschipe (l. 1141) is replaced by gret gult—vnwrestliche (l. 1464) by unkyndely.

Cathedral. The name thus honoured is that of the East Anglian king, who was killed by order of Offa, as related above 792. He was regarded as a martyr, and the brief reign of Offa's son was deemed a vindication of the innocence of king Æthelbriht:—— quin et Deus adeò evidentibus signis sanctitatem ejus prodidit, ut hodieque sedes episcopalis Herefordi sub ipsius nomine consecretur. Nec ineptum debet videri aut incongruum quod antecessores nostri, probi et religiosi viri, vel taciturnitate toleraverunt, vel auctoritate roboraverunt. William of Malmesb., Gesta Regum ii. § 210. 'The Cattle Fair at Hereford on May 20, is still called St. Ethelbert's Fair.

1066. p 201. butse carlas] ship-men, mariners. This butse is probably the same word as the East Anglian buss for a boat, as used by the fishermen of Yarmouth, who speak of their herring-busses.

1066. p 201. se Norrena cyng] This is the Norsk adjective itself: cf. Egilsson, "Lexicon Poeticum Antiquæ Linguæ Septentrionalis," v. Norrænn, Norvegicus. This king was not Harold Harfagera, as stated in MS. D, and by Florence both here and above 1048 (where see note, Ed. Thorpe); but Harold Sigurdson, alias Hardrada. The time of Harfagr is earlier, he died in 036.

1066. p 203 m. eam] uncle. The native word, which the Germans have kept in their Oheim, has, after a struggle, been displaced by the Latin avanculus in its French form oncle. In Spenser we find eme and uncle used of the same relation in continuous stanzas. Faerie Queene, B. ii. C. x; Stanzas 47 and 48. The banished word has left its genitive case behind in the family name EAMES.

what we now call Whitsunday, but the First Sunday after Easter, called Dominica in Albis, because the White Garments of those who had been baptized on Easter Day were worn on the Octave for the last time. How this name should have been transferred to Pentecost is a curious question, about which there was an active debate in the Guardian in 1859. Some held that, like the German Pfingsten, our name is really a corruption of Pentecost, passing through an intermediate form Whingsten to the modern Whitsun, and that therefore it is Whitsun-Day and not Whit-Sunday. Mr. Baron (Aug. 17, 1859) demolished this theory by quoting this place of D, and by references to Lazamon (v. Glossary), to prove the high antiquity of the name White Sunday.

But one thing was still unexplained, viz. why the name was transferred from after Easter to Pentecost. The solution may be, that Pentecost, being a few weeks later in the year, was preferable in our climate for Baptism; and accordingly that it bore away the name of White, which continental practice had associated with Easter Tide.

1070. þa Densca huscarles] "Hus-carls were the 'King's Own,' the body-guard of the Danish Sovereigns. They were retained after the restoration of the Anglosaxon line, and then they seem to have formed a class of Thanes.... The great Earls had Huscarls, like the King." "They were also called Hirdmen." Palgrave's English Commonwealth, p ccclxxxi.

1070. cantelcapas] Chanters' capes or copes. In Cod. Dipl. 940, there are "iii cantercæppa:" cf. Lazamon, Glos. v. Cantelcape.

phe dyde eall be pere munece reede] quod fecit omnial monachorum consilio; and not as Gibson, "se autem hee omnia fecisse Monachorum consilio." All the translators, except my friend Mr. Stevenson, have followed Gibson, and have fixed a most unmerited stigma upon the worthy churchwarden's name. Even Mr. Stevenson's translation betrays an uncertainty, which in such a scholar is almost stranger than oversight. He translates, "and that he did all by the advice of the monks;" leaving it open for the reader to take that as a conjunction to the dishonour of Yware, or as a relative pronoun which would mark the churchwarden as a true man, honoured with the confidence of his fraternity. If Mr. Stevenson had only adhered to the rule he seems to have set himself, and translated verbally, he would have avoided the ambiguity which now attaches to his version, through the intrusion of the conjunction "and."

Had there been an 'and' in that place of the original, it would have appeared to assert the conjunctional dependence of best upon sægde. But even then we should have had a means of correcting the mistake by the expression just above, and swilce littles hwat = and such like trifles. It is plain the removal of these objects was no treachery, but in the interest of the society, when the chronicler could thus speak of it. The Peterborough monks were not more disposed than others to make light of their wrongs. This may be seen a few lines further on. In this place the writer is evidently regretting that the churchwarden could not have included in his parcel the crown of beaten gold, and the bracket of red gold, and many other valuables, enumerated on p 200, which became the prey of the outlaws.

sceolden cumen] were expected to come, were said to be coming. 1071. arhlice] basely, cowardly, dastardly. Compare earhlice of slogon, p 223 h: rancne here and unearhne, p 140 l; bone ungemetlice eargan = the excessively timid. Boethius, Ed. Cardale, p 298 h.

1072. Et pam Gewæde in lædde] D. ferde inn ofer p Wæd. Gibson treated this as an error for 'Tweed.' The annalist of Waverley appears to have read 'Scodwade.' David Macpherson, "Geographical Illustrations," conjectured that it meant the "Scottewattre or Wattyr of Forth."

The Wattyr of Sulway was specially known as Scottis-se or Scottis-wath; and Macpherson quotes from Snorro (Hist. Reg. Norweg.

c. 21), "Deir fóro yfir á nockra, þar sem heitir Skiótans-vad, edr Vapna-vad" = They passed over a certain river at a place called Skiótans-ford or Weapon-ford. Hence it may be supposed that the term vad, wath, wæth, was generally applied to the friths or fiords of Scotland; and the Gewæde or Wæs may have been the Frith of Forth.

A word of this sort, signifying ford or passage, must once have been widely used. In a grant to Shap Abbey (temp. Hen. II), brought to my knowledge by Mr. Albert Way, "totam terram quæ fuit Karl, scilicet per has divisas, de vado de Karlwath &c." Several local names of Waithe seem to belong here, e. g. Waithe near Great Grimsley, Waith Common at Ewerby near Sleaford.

According to Florence, William penetrated to Abernethy, and therefore left both the Tweed and the Frith of Forth in his rear.

1075 D. hearma] Ermine. Wright's Vocabularies, p 22, "Netila, hearma." Shall we call this a gen. pl. or suppose it stands undeclined in composition? In fact it was a mere foreign sound, and had acquired no grammatical attributes in English. This delicate fur coming from N. Asia by Armenian merchants was called in Italy Armellino; and the word passed, along with the article, through the courts of Europe. Diez, Etymologisches Wörterbuch der Romanischen Sprachen.

1075. p 214. ge niðrade] pessundati (Gibson), subdued (Ingram, Stevenson), crushed (Thorpe): niðerian is in its etymological and original sense, e.g. Luke xiv.11, to put down, deprimere; but its prevalent use was "to condemn," e.g. Matt. xii. 7, 37, 42, xx.18; Luke vi. 37. The former seems preferable here, as the translators have taken it.

The narrative of D preserves the tragic lines in a less mutilated form than E. Among them occurs "sume getawod to scande," which has been the subject of some debate. The word scande needs little elucidation. It is Germ. Schante, disgrace. In Wright's Vocabularies, p 21, we find Ignominia, scande. In the Laws of Hlochære and Eadric, § 11, scandlice gretan, is to insult a person with opprobrious epithets; or, as they would be called in Devon, scandalous! More apposite is Layamon, vol. iii. p 176:

preostes he blende al bis folc he scende.

The verb 'to shend' is not uncommon in Elizabethan poetry, e.g. in Spenser's Prothalamion:

..... these twain, that did excel The rest, so far as Cynthia doth shend The lesser stars. and Fairfax, Tasso i. Canto vi:

Tortosa won, lest winter might them shend, They drew to holds, and coming spring attend.

In Shakspeare the preterite or participle shent occurs several times.

The verb tawian will be best understood by a view of the group to which it belongs, as collected and illustrated in Ettmüller's Lexicon, p 528. It appears to have been, in its proper sense, associated with rude manufacturing operations, such as dressing hides; and hence its fitness for expressing shameful handling, when applied to humanity. Compare as a kindred phrase "to sceame tucode," Judges xv. 8. The details of this shameful handling are stated in Florence thus: quosdam erutis oculis vel manibus truncatis deturpavit.

1076. Vithele] Vitalis, Abbot of Westminster. His monument, in the Cloisters of Westminster Abbey, is the earliest English tomb with an effigies; according to Mr. Westmacott, in the Archaeological Journal, 1860, p 304.

1077. forbarn Lundenburh] This fire of London is found in no Saxon Chronicle except E; nor do I find it repeated by any of the Latiners.

1083. "Amongst the causes of this new sort of war, one of the chief was the zeal of Thurstan the abbot to introduce the Norman service, or rather the way of singing begun by William a monk of Feschamp, and to thrust out that of Gregory the Great, which had before been commonly used by the English monks." Inett, History of the English Church, part ii. c. 3. § 6. vol. ii. p 90. Ed. Griffiths. Quoting Malmesb. de Antiq. Glaston. Eccles. p 331. Coll. Gale, [p 114. Ed. Hearne.]

1083. mistukian] This seems to signify the infliction of some irregular and capricious punishment: cf. Ettm. p 534, and Glossarial Index by Herbert Coleridge, v. Tuko. Gibson was so far influenced by the parallel narrative in Florence, as to render perperam docere, explaining it of the abbot's attempt to substitute a modern chant in place of the Gregorian,—by which means he obtains but a poor harmony, and does violence to the word mistukian. Compare "to sceame tucode," Judges xv. 8.

1085. p 218 l. lett agan ut] scrutari, Gibson; marking well the inquisitorial character of the proceeding. Some doubt may be felt about this word agan, what it is. I take it for a compound of gan or gangan = to go; and identical with gegangan, gegan, of which the pret. 'geeodon,' p 2 m; 'geyde,' 617, conveys the notion of incusion and conquest. So here, there is the sense of acquiring statistics by invasion of the Englishman's home; expressed below in other words, Swa swybe nearwelice he hit lett utaspyrian. An admirable illustration occurs in the Laws of Æthelbirht, § 29: Gif friman edor gegangeb = If a freeman enter (violently or intrusively) a habitation, &c.

1085. p 219 h. teale] incrimination; complaint with or without ground; declining rather to the latter aspect, so that the word often stands as equivalent to calumnia, βλασφημία. Thus it is used by Ælfric, who writes it according to the standard form tal. forms teel and toal are provincial; e.g. Ælc synn and tal bid forgifen behreowsigendum mannum, ac bæs Halgan Gastes tal ne bid næfre forgifen. Deah de hwa cwede tallic word ongean me &c.= All sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven to repentant men, but blasphemy of H. G. shall never be forgiven. Even though one utter injurious language against me &c., Hom. i. p 408.—And &a Iudeiscan boceras mid hete bæt tældon; ac heora tál næs na of rihtwisnysse, ac of nide=And the Jewish scribes censured that with warmth, but their censure was not of justice, but of envy, Id. p 338.—Peah wære Godes rihtwisnys eallunga untæle=Yet would God's justice be quite unassailable, Id. p 112. The prevalence of telnys, false accusation, is one of the cotemporary evils complained of in a passage about to be quoted from a Homily on the Life of S. Neot, which has been thought to belong to this date. The present Annal closes with a tale of distress which in the next year swells into a long and loud wail of lamentation. In the same general strain, and agreeing with it in several particulars, is the peroration of this Life of S. Neot. Mr. Duffus Hardy has said (Catalogue, p 539) that this Homily must be assigned to one of the two epochs of murrain and general distress, 986 or 1086. He prefers the former, because of the supposed approach of the end of the world. If this apprehension ceased at 1000, this single feature of the Homily is enough to decide its date, and it must belong to 986. But all the other features coincide so much better with the narrative of our Chronicle at certain later dates, e.g. 1085-6; or 1116; or again 1131: that I am inclined to suppose the miseries of the eleventh and twelfth centuries may have tended to prolong the anticipation of impending And it appears to me that not only is the good time of Alfred's reign here commemorated; the loss of a native dynasty is touched in accents not loud but deep. It must be admitted that the earlier date represents very bad times, a weak government, want and distress, conspicuous crimes, Danish ravages. The passage is as follows: Eac is to wytene $ se king Ælfred manega bec

Ah, brethren, those were good days, in that good time, for the Christian life of the people, and the blessing of just rulers! Now it is a groan and a cry on every side, and huge murrain for the people's sins, and the fruits of the wood and the field are not so good as they were formerly, but all the fruits of the earth are seriously damaged. And injustice is vastly on the increase far and wide, and dissolution of amity, and slanderous accusation; and that man is now thought shrewdest and cleverest who can betray another and defraud him of goods. Men perjure themselves too, even when they are not under pressure, and this makes it worse, all the world over, and thereby we may understand that it is nigh doom's day. Now, the father has no mercy on his son, nor one man on another, but each man is at strife with his neighbour, and God's law is not respected, as it should be. Thereby we may learn that this world is on the wane, and that it is very near to the end of this world. But withal, he shall be saved that taketh heed to himself in time. Let us entreat S. Neot and other saints, that they be our advocates NOTES , 353 with the heavenly king, that our lot be not cast on too utterly bad a time, and that we may after death attain to everlasting rest. MS. Cott. Vespas. D. xiv. f. 148.

segetes etiam et arborum fructus segnius maturescebant (Gibson), corn and fruits were at a stand (Ingram), corn and fruits were left standing (Stevenson), corn and fruits were at a stand (Thorpe). The only other case of æt-standan that I find is in Beowulf 1776 (Kemble, 891 Grein), where it is used of the sword-blade that has passed through the dragon's body. But whether the verb æt-stod in that place signifies that it stood out conspicuous, or that it stuck in to the wall beyond, is doubted. Kemble takes the former, and renders æt-standan by exstare: Thorpe the latter; and also Grein, if I understand his German.

If Kemble is right, set-standene might signify cereals sprouting in the ear.

p 221 m. wur'sful] majestic, worshipful, dignified, kingly.

p 221 b. fyrmest to eacan pam cynge] the most prominent, the first man next to the king.

p 222 h. sons he forless &c.] This was law in Saxon times; cf. Alfred's Laws, 25, § 1; and still in Bracton.

p 222 m. werscipe] "and if he might have lived two years longer, he would have won Ireland by his valour, and without any weapons" (Stevenson). Gibson, Ingram, Thorpe, substantially the same. But one may ask, What is this antithesis between valour and weapons? How should his valour act without weapons? If it be answered, By the terror of a great military renown—then we reply, that this cause is speedy in operation, and is not helped by the lapse of time; why then the words "two years longer?"

Plainly, werscipe is, by a negligent orthography, for weerscipe; and has nothing to do with wer=vir, but with weer=pactum, fadus, cautela. So wes for wees, weron for weeron (see Glossary). Then a clear sense comes out: if he might have lived two years longer, he would have won Ireland with his wary negotiation, and without any weapons.

"It (the Conquest of Ireland) was simply the sequel of the Norman Conquest of England." Prof. Goldwin Smith, Ireland, p 45. "Ireland was struck by the last languid wave of a deluge of conquest, which had overwhelmed all the neighbouring nations." Id. p 47.

p 223 t. for leon] sic MS. for fleon, Gibson, Ingram, Thorpe. p 223. Eac weard on Ispanie &c.] The only notice of Spain in these Chronicles. But though Spanish affairs generally were not much heard of at Peterborough, yet the struggles of Spain at this date, which agitated the heart of Christendom and produced the Cid el Campeador, might well come to the knowledge of a historian who had lived at the Conqueror's court.

In 1085, Toledo was wrested from the Moors after they had held it 372 years. This was achieved by Alphonse VI, king of Castile and Léon, the "Christian king Anphos" of our text. Here was the first step in the Christian Reconquest of Spain.

So startled were the Emirs, that they rashly invited over Youssouf ben Taschfin, parvenu king of Fez, who readily came with his formidable Almoravides. The terror of this army roused France to make common cause with the Christian states of Spain. The confederates met the Africans at Zélaca, near Badajoz, and suffered a tremendous defeat. But this victory was turned by the ambitious Youssouf against his own allies. He subjugated the Mussulman governments, and established the sway of the Almoravides. Toledo remained in the hands of the Christians.

In the next generation the struggle was continued. Another Alphonse drove the son of Youssouf from Saragossa, and made that city the capital of Aragon (1118). This Alphonse ("the warrior") even marched an army into Granada (1125), and attempted the work that was reserved for Ferdinand. His romantic expedition, though disastrous, shed lustre on the Christian cause.

It almost looks as if our chronicler wrote this paragraph late enough to have heard something of all this, otherwise his closing words are loose and incorrect.

1086. p 223 b. to selcen mynstre and to selcen cyrcean uppe land] This is a good passage to illustrate the early relations between the minster and the country church. The religious organization is here seen to repose upon the minster as its unit and base, where we should now put the parish church.

1087 m. Rodbeard amundbræg] A Saxon corruption of the name De Mowbray: cf. Flor. ad annum.

1087 b. De b' Odo be has cyng of awocan] Here 'cyng' is a blunder for 'hing;'=The bishop Odo with whom these things originated.

1087. p 225 h. heora wudas and slætinge] sylvas suas et venatus, Gibson: their woods and chaces, Ingram: their woods and liberty the right of killing [the deer], Stevenson: their woods and liberty of the chace, Thorpe. See Halliwell, v. Slate; and Herbert Coleridge, v. Slating.

1090. Albemare] Mr. Thorpe identifies this with Aumale on the Brêle, formerly called the Eu, the boundary between Picardy and Normandy: quoting Mr. Stapleton's Paper in Archæologia, vol. xxvi, which I have not the opportunity of consulting. Moreri, Dictionnaire, gives Albamala as the Latin form of Aumale.

"Comite invito" (Gibson)—"against the will of the Count" (Thorpe). Unpances is the adverbial genitive of unpance, or more properly ungepance, of which the meaning is "mala intentio" (cf. Grimm's Gr. ii. 777. for the force which the prefix un-imparts), "an adverse, hostile purpose." Hence the expression in the text means "to the detriment or prejudice of the count; or, in pursuance of hostile designs against the count." It would appear to have been by retroaction upon the simple pances, that the latter grew to signify gratis, uttro, gratia, &c.; and in this movement we discern the pivot of transition from think, cogitare, to thank, gratias agere.

Malcolm moved out of Scotlande into Lothian, which was in (the Engles' land, or) England. Here we see that 'England' was at that time bounded by the Frith of Forth, and Lothian was in 'England' and not in 'Scotland.' Cf. Geographical Illustrations of Scotlish History, by David Macpherson, 1796, v. Louthian. But it must be observed, "Engla land" here, is purely an ethnological and not a political term. As to government, it appears to have been held by the kings of Scotland under the crown of England, and to have been one of those districts which made it a confused question how far the Scotch throne was feudatory to the English.

Mr. Thorpe renders "into the district of Leeds," because Flor. has "in provincia Loidis."

each other. The verbs in to- have so much lost their ancient character, that the investigator of the English language as it is, naturally takes this to to be a preposition, and supposes an ellipse of the governed substantive. In the old language there were the compound verbs to-bræcan, to-sceotan, to-tæran, &c.; but now we hear of 'breaking to pieces,' 'tearing to shreds,' &c.: and Dean Alford says, 'that in the expression "shutting to," it is the preposition, and not the adverb, that is used; that to which the door is shut being omitted.' The Queen's English, p 32.

1093. be ser on his agenre hand stod] which before was in 1094. p 230 h. læhte] Of this root we have the latch of a door, and the verb is preserved in full use in Norfolk, where men say of a cricket-ball, "If yo'll hull it, I'll latch it," i. e. If you will throw it, I will catch it.

Gibson took 'tide' in these places for festival, season, as we still speak of Christmas-tide, Whitsun-tide. This is surely right, and it is not easy to see why the modern translators have not followed him. His version is as follows: Eorum aliquos Rex ante illud festum jussit in custodias tradi; et postea admodum minaci edicto per totam hanc terram [misso] jussit omnes qui à Rege terras tenebant, modò pace dignos haberi se vellent, adesse suæ Curiæ in festo.

gemahlice] In Wright's Vocabularies, pp 50, 55, gemah is put for the Latin words procax, pervicax, importunus; and gemahnys for procacitas, pervicacia. See quotation in note on 1098.

1096. p 233 t. hine on orreste overcom] canquished him is (judicial) combat. Orrest is a Danish word, which was probably well understood in the neighbourhood of Peterborough. Egilsson, Lexicon Poet. Septent. v. Orrosta, prælium—and, Folkorosta, prælium acie commissum. I am not aware that the word is found elsewhere in the Saxon remains. Ettmüller, Lexicon Anglo Sax, p 41, gives orrestscipe, ignominia, on the authority of a Cotton MS. Vocabulary. I have searched Mr. Wright's Edition of the Vocabularies for it in vain. On p 21 there is "Ignominia, scande." If Ettmüller's instance is not a pure error, the word can hardly have anything to do with our orrests—it would probably be a compound of or and estscipe.

The genuine Saxon term would have been on gefechte; but as the verb gefeaht had just preceded, the variation is useful. Already we see the language profiting by the commixture of different national elements.

1096. p 233 h. pæs cynges aðum] Eude, earl of Champagne, had married William's half-sister, and on this ground he is called the king's aðum, a term which commonly means son-in-law. In Wright's Vocabularies, we have Gener, apum, p 52; and Gener, opam, p 88. It is not found that language produces a special term to denote each grade of family relationship, until after a long and elaborate discipline in jurisprudence, such as that which the Latin passed through. The vagueness of the term 'brother' in Hebrew is well known; our word 'nephew' formerly denoted two different relations, and 'cousin' in our own day is still found convenient to express indeterminate kinship. It is therefore a very moderate deflection of a sum from a daughter's husband to a sister's husband. The same use is found above, 1091 m.

1096. p 233 m. and eall Normandig set him mid fee alisde, swa swa hi ha sehte weeron] There is nothing to add to the translations of Gibson and Stevenson, the two who have understood the passage, except that alisde ('mercaretur,' Gibson; 'purchased,' Stevenson) is identically our modern verb leased. In Latin documents it was represented by redimere, and reversely this Latin word was supplied in Anglo Saxon theology by the verb alysan. Ps. lxix. 7, Alysend=Redeemer: cf. Ps. xlix. 16. Ælfric's Hom. i. p 138, God bebead, on hære ealdan æ, his folce hæt hi sceoldon him offrian ælc frumcenned hysecild, obse alysan hit ut mid fif scyllingum=God bade his people, in the old law, that they should offer to him every first-born male child, or redeem it with five shillings.

It may seem strange that this verb should be used for an act which is almost the opposite to redeeming, viz. the taking as pledge or security. But this migration of a word is not hard to parallel; and we still hear the verb to lease used both of lessor and lessee.

them was named Cadwgan. All the translators agree here in translating sum=one; and this rendering might be advantageously extended to many other cases. Thus in 605 E, fiftiga sum is not with about fifty' or 'some fifty,' but simply 'one of fifty.' So 626 E, twelfa sum=one of twelve: 794 E, heretogena sum=one of the leaders: 894, p 92 m, sum dæl=(not 'some part,' but) a part: 911 A, sum hund scipa=one hundred ships. There are doubtless instances in which nothing but the modern 'some' can be used to express it, but these are less numerous than is supposed. How nearly it is equivalent to the numeral 'one' may be seen from Mark iv. 8, where it alternates with an; 'and an brohte prytigfealdne, sum syxtigfealdne, sum hundfealdne.'

The verb thus repeated here, is not found else in the Chronicles, and it may be doubted whether it is preserved in any other Anglo Saxon text. The law of Eadgar about burying in the church (Wilkins, p 84, § 29) seems to contain, not this verb, but the well-known lætan, to permit, allow, grant, let: best man innan circan senigne man ne birige, bute man wite best he on life Gode to bam well gecweme were best man burh best less to best he sy best legeres wyrbe=that within the church they bury no man, unless they know that in life he so pleased God, that upon this ground concession be made of so honourable a resting-place.

But leton in our text has nothing to do with lætan. It would be vain to look for its infinitive, and other parts, for it is simply a Danish word. The Danish verb Lede is to seek minutely for an obscure thing, from corner to corner. Man kan ikke 'lede' efter et Skib paa Oceanet; i. e. this verb 'lede' is not used of looking for a ship on the wide ocean. Molbech, v. Lede. In Swedish it is Leta, which is in abundant use, and has various applications, all branching from the sense to search, enquire.

The root of this verb is found also in the southern branch of the Gothic family, but in the opposite voice. Instead of bearing the active sense, of searching, peering into; it bears the passive sense of being seen, seeming, videri. In Platt-Deutsch we find Laten rendered by auffehen, ideinen, gastaltet sens. Bremisch-Nieder saechsisches Woerterbuch, Bremen, 1768. So in Cheshire, Leeten means, you pretend to be; e. g. you are not so mad as you leeten you. Grose and Pegge's Provincial Glossary.

Both of these senses spring out of that train of ideas which is associated with white, the human face.

1008. p 235. of eode This word, which signifies attainment, acquisition, answers in a general way to the English verb to obtain. Gibson's impetraverat goes beyond the original, and conveys that it was obtained by simple request. This is not in of eode, nor does history supply it. In Cod. Dipl. 594, the word is used for acquisition by involuntary purchase. It is not very clear how the elements of this compound should have led to the sense which it obviously bears. Mr. Thorpe is at fault upon this word (Glossary to Analecta, v. ofeode and ofgangan). Ettmüller omits it. Under these circumstances some illustration is desirable. "We sceolon burh gehyrsumnysse and forhæfednysse and eadmodnysse, anmodlice to urum exek stæppan, and mid halgum mægnum done eard ofgan, be we durh leahtras forluron;" i. e. " We should, by obedience and continence and humility, resolutely march to our inheritance, and with holy virtues attain that congenial land which by our vices we lost." Homilies (Ed. Thorpe), vol. i. p 118. "Sollice gemagnys is ham socan Déman gecweme, beah de heo mannum un cancwurde sv: forcan be se arfæsta and se mildheorta God wile bæt we mid gemåglicum benum his mildheortnysse ofgán, and hé nele swa micclum swa we geearniað us geyrsian;" i. e. "In fact, importunity is pleasing to the true Judge, though it is offensive to men; for it is the will of the just and merciful God that we with importunate prayers obtain (=conquer, win) his mercy, and he will not be angry with us according to our deservings." Id. vol. ii. p 126.

Other verbs of motion, compounded with of, give this sense of assequi, adipisci; viz. ofridan, 877, 901; offaran, p 157. Cf. Thwaites, Heptateuch, Joshua ii. 5. Cf. note on 1048 (p 178 h), of sænde.'

1100. swa swa mænige sædan þe hit geseon sceoldan] as many said who professed to have seen it. This clause has occurred a little before, 1098. By the word 'sceoldan,' the writer is exempted from all share in the statement, like Herodotus so often, e.g. vii. 152: Έγὰ δὲ ὀφείλω λέγειν τὰ λεγόμενα, πείθεσθαί γε μὲν ὧν οὐ παντάπασι δφείλω.

This verb tyrwigan, tyrigan or tyrian, is not found in any other place of the Chronicles. But it occurs in Ælf. Hom. i. p 562: Pa gelamp hit þæt sume þa hæðenan wurdon mid andan getyrigde &c. = Then it happened that some heathens were disturbed with envy &c. Other examples in the Lexicons, Ettmüller, p 522.

not, as now, another word for marriage. There is a highly interesting chapter in the Saxon Laws, entitled, Be wifmannes beweddunge, which Mr. Thorpe has put among the Laws of Edmund (vol. i. p 254); but Schmid has given separately, Appendix vi. The various legal steps in the process, from the enquiries preliminary to betrothal (weddian) down to the religious forms that are to be observed at the marriage (æt þam giftan), are stated very distinctly. Below, p 243, we have the expression for marriage, "for his dohter gifte," i. e. giving away: cf. "Who giveth this woman &c.?"

here to this land in a hostile manner," Stevenson: "who was meditating a hostile invasion of this land," Thorpe. It is not easy to find in modern English a simple rendering for fundian in this place. It is not exactly the act of coming or the intention of coming, but the impulse of coming, the move, the start of the expedition. Perhaps it would be best translated, "who started for this country with hostile intent." The word was selected here, to express by anticipation the abortiveness of the project. Above 1085, fundode hiderward may be rendered huc proficisceretur, was preparing to advance against this country. To say that Cnut meditated an attack on England, would have been almost superfluous, from what was known of his position and character. Munch, Det Norske Folks Historie, vol. iii. p 399 sqq. To say that he came, would contradict the sequel.

The verb does not occur in the Chronicles more than in these two places; but we have 1106 (p 241 t) the expression "on his fundunge ofer sæ," which means, on the eve of his departure, or when he was in actual motion to depart over sea. The verb fundian is related to the poetical adjective fus, ready to set off, identical with OHG funs=pronus, promptus, Graff.

The poetical examples of fundian have been collected by Bouterwel and Grein. Some of the best prose examples are in the translation of Boethius, where it is rather a frequent word, e. g. to been gode calle be gesceafts fundiab be heore gecynd healdab—to that good (viz. the summum bonum) all the creatures tend, that keep true to their nature, xxxv. § v. p 256, Ed. Cardale: gif twegen men fundiab to anre stowe—if two men are setting out for one place, xxxvi. § init. Probably there are not many languages that could furnish a precise match to this verb; δρμασθαι is that which most readily offers itself.

convenit, Flor. This is the right meaning, according to agreement between him and the king. But how is the simple and vague geweard with a dative (cyérero across) able to convey this idea? Perhaps this is an instance of that readiness to adopt an elliptical phraseology, which is of the genius of the English language. Above, p 151 t we have the original and full expression, "geweard him and pam folce on Lindesige anes" = an agreement was made between him and the folk in Lindsey. This sentence could be rendered verbally in Latin or Greek or any cultivated language almost; but perhaps we should search far without finding an idiom such as this, with the main and most significant substantive (anes=covenant) omitted. Cf. Dean Alford, Queen's English, p 65. In Cod. Dipl. 1302, are repeated and strongly marked examples of this idiom.

described under the other, Ingram; who in his note takes a severely mathematical view of the passage, but very happily quotes Matth. Westm. "albi, picti, et mirabiliter implicati." It cannot be doubted that Matthew's words are derived from the Saxon here before us. Thorpe translates "each twined under the other." This gebroids.

For a picture, you have only to see and praise it, but it is not enough to take a view of writing, unless you also read it, and understand the Hom. i. p 186. In the other passage he is saying that though in heaven the saved will command a view of the woes of the lost, yet it will not diminish their felicity; "ac heora tintrega becymb bam gecorenum to maran blisse, swa swa on metinge bis forsewen seo blace anlicnys, bæt seo hwite sy beorhtre gesewen"=but their pains will have the effect of enhancing the bliss of the elect, in the same manner us in a picture a dark figure is put in, that the fair one may shew the brighter.

on the part of an Editor of the Saxon Chronicles to pass this celebrated difficulty over without note or comment. But before a new remedy is proposed, the previous suggestions should be reviewed.

Lectio fortasse vitiosa; certè vocabuli significatio me latet. Gibson.

Ingram translates, "who held Maine in fee-tail of Henry;" adding the following in a note: "That is, the territory was not a fee-simple, but subject to taillage or taxation; and that particular species is probably here intended, which is called in old French 'en queuage,' an expression not very different from that in the text above."

Mr. Stevenson provisionally adopts Ingram's translation, adding: "The rendering here adopted is that of Ingram, which is allowed to stand, though unsatisfactory, no better explanation having as yet occurred."

Mr. Thorpe proposes, instead of "on cweow," to read "Angeow," translating it thus, "who held Le Maine of king Henry and Anjou;" and adding the following note: "If the reading of 'Angeow,' for the senseless 'oncweow' of the text, be well founded, it shews that Hélie held of both princes, of Henry as count of Normandy, and of the count of Anjou."

No one will think that Mr. Thorpe's emendation, either for its historical or philological probability, is worthy to displace that of Ingram, which has at least the merit of ingenuity. To Ingram's it may be objected, that it takes no account of the conjunction 'and.'

It appears to me that the place may possibly be mended by simpler means. Instead of 'oncweow' I would propose to read 'oncneow.' This is then a verb coupled with geheold, and standing in an antithetical position to the next apodosis 'and hi togeanes pam cynge heold.' The translation would in this case be as follows: Also this year died Count Hélie, who held Maine under king Henry and acknowledged [the dependency]; and after his death the Count of Anjou had it, and held it against the king.

1110. p 243 m. Ceortes æge] This ancient foundation dates from a little after the middle of the seventh century, as it owes its origin to Erkenwald, who was bishop of London 675-693, and of whom Bede (iv. 6) says, that he founded the two monasteries of Chertsey and Barking (Essex) before he was bishop. After the Danish ravages it appears to have been resuscitated, and it was among the first of those on whom the Reform of Dunstan took effect, above 964. The death of an Abbot is noticed 1084.

In the year 1853, workmen who were employed on the site came on some encaustic tiles, which happily caught the eye of Mr. Shurlock, who ensured their preservation. They are now in the South Kensington Museum. The style of art on these tiles is not unlike the illustrations in Cædmon and other Anglo Saxon manuscripts. Mr. Shaw refers them to the thirteenth century. Tile Pavements from Chertsey Abbey, Surrey, by Henry Shaw, F.S.A., 1857. He remarks: "It is somewhat singular that although the destruction of this extensive and richly endowed Abbey was so complete that scarcely one stone was allowed to remain upon another or even a tile to escape mutilation, no record has yet been found of the time when this destruction took place, under whose authority it occurred, or of any of the circumstances attending it."

In 1861, the site was sold by auction, and Mr. T. R. Bartrop, one of the honorary secretaries of the Surrey Archæological Society, was the purchaser. In Bede the name is spelt Cerotæsei (v. l. Ceorotesei); in Cod. Dipl. 987 (marked spurious by Kemble) it is Cirotesege.

- 1121. Abelis] Adeliza of Louvain is the best known form, of which 'Adelis' may be a Saxon rendering. She is also called Alix la Belle. Our English form is Alice. The name which Queen Adelaide has lately planted among us, a name representing the Old High German Adalheid, i. e. nobilitas, nobleness (as to this -heid, see Grimm, Gr. ii. p 498), is probably the same. See more in Miss Yonge's History of Christian Names, vol. ii. p 398. A late discovery presents us with this Queen's name in what may be deemed an authorized form. Fair impressions of her seal have for the first time come to light in the muniments of the Marquis of Westminster, bearing SIGILLVM-AALIDIS. In the Foundation Charter of Reading Abbey, preserved at the Rolls, it is written "signum Adeleidis reginæ." A grant to the Abbey, printed in Kennett, begins "ego Aelidis regina." - connection between meteoric phenomena and the events of history. But these groundless anxieties have produced some of the most lively touches in our early records. Nowhere has the descriptive energy of language been more brought out than when minds have been wrought upon by these apprehensions. Above 1104 we have a graphic account of a parhelion; here and below 1131 of an Aurus Borealis.

We are apt to suppose that it was only in the remote and primitive times that men's minds could be terrified by such appearances; but the following passages shew that the public was just a easily alarmed in the eighteenth century as in the twelfth.

In 1716 the public mind was much excited by the trials and executions that ensued upon the quelling of the insurrection of 1715, and especially with the execution of Lord Derwentwater.

The following is from the Diary of Mary Countess Comper (Murray, 1864), under the date of March 6, 1716:

"An extraordinary light in the sky, described to me since by Dr. Clarke, who saw it from the beginning. First appeared a black cloud, from whence smoke and light issued forth at once on every side, and then the cloud opened, and there was a great body of pale fire, that rolled up and down, and sent forth all sorts of colours like the rainbow on every side; but this did not last above two or three minutes. After that it was like pale elementary fire issuing out on all sides of the horizon, but most especially at the north and north-west, where it fixed at last. The motion of it was extremely swift and rapid, like clouds in their swiftest rack. Sometimes it discontinued for a while, at other times it was but as streaks of light in the sky, but moving always with great swiftness. About one o'clock this phenomenon was so strong, that the whole face of the heavest was entirely covered with it, moving as swiftly as before, but extremely low. It lasted till past four, but decreased till it was quite gone. At one, the light was so great that I could, out of my window, see people walk across Lincoln's-innfields, though there was no moon. Both parties turned it on their enemies. The Whigs said it was God's judgment on the horrid rebellion, and the Tories said that it came for the Whigs taking off the two lords that were executed. I could hardly make my chairmen come home with me, they were so frightened, and I was forced to let my glass down, and preach to them as I went along, to comfort them. I'm sure anybody that had overheard the dialogue would have laughed heartily. All the people were drawn out into the streets, which were so full one could hardly pass, and all frighted to death."

"March 7. The town full of lies of what was seen in the air last night. Papers printed and sold that two armies were seen to fight in the air, that two men with flaming swords were seen to fight over Lincoln's-inn-fields. The mob that went to Mr. Linet's burial last night said they saw two men in the sky fight without heads."

In the Historical Register for 1716 there is an account of this phenomenon:

"March 6. The same evening, about eight of the clock, was seen a strange phenomenon in the sky. It appeared at first like a huge body of light, compact within itself, but without motion; but in a little time it began to move and separate, extending itself towards the west, when it seemed, as it were, to dispose itself into columns or pillars of flame. From thence it darted south-east with amazing swiftness, and after many undulatory motions and vibrations, there appeared to be a continual fulguration, interspersed with green, red, blue, and yellow. Then it moved towards the north; from whence, in a little time, it renewed its wavy motions and coruscations as before, which continued to be seen till past three in the morning."

Mr. Gibson, the antiquary, in his Dilston Hall, or Memoirs of the Earl of Derwentwater, says that the phenomenon has ever since been known as "Lord Derwentwater's Lights." [Extracted from Guardian, May 4, 1864.]

1123. p 250 h. samodlice] This was no adverb of every day currency, but made with a purpose. It occurs not again in the Chronicles, nor do the Dictionaries furnish another instance. It is not merely 'together' (Thorpe), which is in Saxon setsomne, tosomne, setgeodere. Ingram alone has translated the word adequately "all in a body." The bishops had determined to act collectively, unitedly, conjointly, and therefore they went to the king all in a body. "Unanimiter" (Gibson) is implied in samodlice.

1124. Belmunt Watteuile] Belmunt appears to be Beaumont, $2\frac{1}{2}m$. from Pont L'Evêque in Normandy, the birthplace of Laplace the mathematician.

rical p 253. gewitene mot strange motes] The latter expression "harsh, severe courts," is illustrated by what is narrated of the proceedings at the "gewitene mot" in Leicestershire. We are not to suppose that this "gewitene mot," which was presided over by a subject, was the Great Council of the Nation; neither was it a "scirgemot" or Assembly of the Shire. Saxon institutions had been much disfigured and confused by arbitrary and unconstitutional expedients, and men had forgotten the precise import of the terms belonging to them. Among other changes, open courts were much disused, and were superseded by the "hall-mote" or court held in the lord's hall, the mere statement of which readily suggests what would follow, and makes the "strange motes" of the text easy to comprehend.

1125. fals This is the Latin falsum = a counterfeit, spurious thing, a fraud. The crime of falsum applied not only to the forger of a will or other instrument, but likewise to the adulteration of gold or silver coin. See Smith's Dict. Gr. and Rom. Antiquities v. Falsum. From it has come the present French word for "forger," which is faux, having passed through a form much like that in the The word fals (neuter substantive, peet fals) occurs both for base coin, and also for the crime of debasing the coin, falsification, forgery. the home-park itself. The nature of the hunt here imagined totally different from that of our day. Now-a-days men hunt for exercise and sport, but then they hunted for food, or for the luxure of fresh meat. Now the flight of the beast is the condition of a good hunt, but in those days it entailed disappointment. They had neither the means of giving chase nor of killing at a distance, so they used stratagem to bring the game within the reach of their missiles. labyrinth of alleys was penned out at a convenient part of the wood, and here the archers lay under covert. The hunt began by sending men round to brush and beat the wood, and drive the game with dogs and horns into the ambuscade. This pen is the haia so frequently occurring among the silvæ in Domesday. The der fald of our text seems to be the same. Horns were used, not as with us. to call the dogs; or, as in France, to signal the stray sportsmen; but to scare the game. The text has twenty or thirty horn blowers. In fact it was the battue, which is now, under altered circumstances, discountenanced by the authorities of the chase, but which in early times was the only way for man to cope with the beasts of the field.

Gervase, so often referred to by Professor Willis for the excellence of his architectural notices. He was a sacristan in Christ Church, witnessed the fire, and watched the rebuilding. Learned architects are able to verify his descriptions in the present fabric. See especially, A Lecture on Modern Restoration of Ancient Buildings, by Mr. Gilbert Scott, 1864.

The figure is, that this Abbot Henry's stock in life was a wallet full of tricks and evasions, but that now when he sorely needed one of them to serve his present occasions, they were all exhausted or worn out. Gibson caught the spirit of the passage: "omnis ei angulus tentandus est."

bishop of Salisbury. Gibson rendered "suum nepotem," and this has been followed by all after translators. Yet the words are distinctly plural, to a degree that admits not of being rendered in English, as both the pronoun and the substantive have plural forms.

1137 b. carl men and wimen] males and females, men and women. Carl men is not "peasant men" (as Mr. Thorpe has rendered here and above, p 222 h, carl man "common man"), but simply men, the male sex as opposed to wimmen the female. It is necessary to distinguish clearly between this word carl, mas, and coorl, rusticus; because they are quite distinct in use, if not in origin. Grimm (Gr. ii. p 463) gives carl-cat, tom-cat; carl-fugel, avis mascula. This is the word that has become a Christian name, Rati, Carolus, Charles; and our compound carl man (Frankish karlo-man) is the source of the name Charlemagne, the 'man' having been twisted into magnus by after-thought.

1137. p 262 h. lof j grī] This would appear to be an abbreviation for lof and grin, which might be rendered beam and shackles. In the Paris Psalter, Ps. xxxiv. 8, teldedon gryne, they tilled a snare; and v. 9, Gefo hi þa grynu, may the gins catch them.

This barbarous engine seems to challenge comparison with the "devil on the neck," which was used under Henry VIII. to vindicate the honour of the Six Articles. Fox ii. 517, 536.

1137. p 262 m. drapen] they killed. Although this word occurs both in Beowulf (3487, 3178, Ed. Kemble) and in Cædmon (deabdrepe 3424=ictus letalis: gemynddrepen 1565=stupor sensûs, Bouterwek)—yet its presence in this place may safely be attributed to Danish influence. The word may have passed at an early period from the Danish to the Anglian Scalds, and the occurrence of the word in those poems tends to confirm their Anglian character. The word is not cited from any positively Saxon documents. It is a Norsk word: Icel. drepa; Swed. dräpa; Dan. dræbe=to kill. In the Glossarial Index of Thirteenth Century English, by Herbert Coleridge, v. Drepen, it is cited from Havelok the Dane, and an Early English Psalter, edited by Rev. J. Stevenson, for the Surtees' Society, both Dano-Anglian sources.

1137. p 262 m. flee] This word is found written without the S in a Vocabulary melioris ævi, Wright, p 60 a; "Lanio....flee tawere."

1137. p 262 l. ouer sithon] I cannot adopt Gibson's rendering 'tandem enim;' though followed by Ingram and Stevenson 'after a while;' still less Mr. Thorpe's 'everywhere at times.'

Sithon or sixon or sipum (d. pl. of six=journey, course, going) meant number of times, fois, vicibus. With a numeral it is of common occurrence, twelf sipum, duodecies; seofon sipon, septuplum, &c. In later times we find other words besides numerals combined with it, e. g. offte sipe = oftentimes, Ormulum, Ed. White, v. Offte; and often sithes in Chaucer, Prol. Cant. Tales, 487.

It is not impossible that ouer in this place may belong to the 'of' which is in 'often;' and have nothing to do with 'ofer, over.' Then it is identical with Chaucer's often sithes, oftentimes. Supposing 'over' to be meant, it would mean 'times past reckoning.'

openly that Christ slept. Was it His poor friends or His proud foes that said so? The latter, it would seem, from the word openlies. But there are examples for both. Perhaps in some sense He admits it Himself—Dormio sed cor meum vigilat. Cantica Canticorum. When He slept in the ship, all this was indicated. Ezekiel viii. 12, ix. 9; 2 Pet. iii. 4; Ps. cxxi. 4.

1137. p 263 h. circe wican . . . horder wycan] Mr. Stevenson's version of this passage was (substantially) right, but Mr. Thorne has involved it in obscurity again. Mr. Stevenson has it:- "privileges, one for all the lands of the abbacy, and another for all the lands which belonged to the sacrist; and had he lived longer, he intended having done the same for the treasurer." The grammatical designation of wican is obscure, as there are no marks of gender, and I do not know where we find the word in another inflection. But as it ranges here with '$ abbotrice,' it may be expected to signify rather office than officer. These words circe wican and horder wycan should be the offices of which we have the officers' titles on page 260 h, 'circe weard and hordere,' church warden and treasurer. And there is a passage in Ælfric, Hom. ii. p 502 l, m which wican is used of ecclesiastical offices in general: "Hu may offe hu dear ænig læwede man him to geteon burh riccetere Criste wican; i. e. How can or how dare any lay man appropriate to himself through the insolence of power the offices of Christ!" With this slight modification of Mr. Stevenson's version, I would render:privileges, one for all the lands of the abbacy, and another for the lands that belong to the sacristy, and if his life were prolonged be meant to do the same for the treasury.

1137. p 263 m. Nu we willen sægen &c.] This story of & William of Norwich is a recurring one. S. Hugh of Lincoln, a suit of the same strain, is thus apostrophised by Chaucer's Prioress in be peroration:

O yonge Hughe of Lyncoln; slayn also With cursed Jewes—as it is notable, For it nys but a litel while ago—

The Tale of the Prioress is but a variation of this supposed Jewish atrocity. S. William seems to have retained his celebrity down to the time of the Reformation, at least in Norfolk. In Loddon church, which is advanced perpendicular of about 1500, there is a painting of his crucifixion on a panel of the rood-screen, still in fair preservation. I am indebted to my friend the Rev. Greville J. Chester for a copy of this relic.

These accusations against the Jews are not everywhere so obsolete as in England. So recently as 1840, the "Chamber of Deputies" debated on an affair of this nature. The French consul at Damascus brought a charge against the Jews there, that they had immolated a Christian monk for their passover. The Turkish authorities proceeded so severely against the Jews, that great indignation was excited at Paris against the consul. The government, however, supported their representative; and the validity of the charge against the Rabbins was stoutly maintained by M. Thiers in the Chamber of Deputies.

right and the standard was written by a cotemporary, Ethelred [al. Ailred, Aldred] Abbot of Rievaulx. It is printed in Twysden "X Scriptores"—"de bello inter regem Scotiæ et Barones Angliæ apud Standardum juxta Alvertonam." In this recital, (which is merely a Cistercian demonstration,) Willielmus comes Albemarum is overshadowed by the hero of the piece Walterus Espec, the founder of Rievaulx Abbey, where the Cistercians had their earliest foundation (1132) and chief seat in England. A representation of "The Standard" is given in Twysden, apparently from an ancient drawing.

1140. p 264 t. fordfeorde Will' ærceb' of Cantwarb'] Mr. Hartshorne has vindicated for Archbishop William de Corbeuil the glory of being the builder of the celebrated "Gundulf's" Tower at Rochester. Archæological Journal, September 1863, p 210. He quotes Gervase, ap. Decem Scriptores, p 1664, saying that "rex Henricus dedit et confirmavit ecclesiæ Cantuariæ et Willielmo archiepiscopo Castellum quod est in civitate Roffensi, ubi idem archiepiscopus turrim egregiam ædificavit." Strongly confirmed by Florence, Cont. 1126.

1154. 7 at Torn'] Cf. 1066, p 203 m, where we get some insight how patronage accrued to Burh.

The magnificence of Peterborough Abbey gave occasion to the proverb Orgoyl de Bourk'=Peterborough Pride, which is found in a list of local characteristics current in the time of Edw. II; published by Mr. Nichols in Gent. Mag., January 1862, p 64, from MS. Douce 98.

DIRECTIONS

Words peculiar to X are distinguished by an *.

Words common to both Chronicles are in thick type.

Words undistinguished by either of these signs are peculiar to E.

Italics in head-words signify a state of transition, or other departure from the normal type.

References are sometimes made by the number of the year, and sometimes by the number of the page, so as to subdivide the text and reduce the extent of the portions referred to. The Annal-figure is used for referring to a whole Annal, only when the whole Annal is printed upon the same page. When a page is turned in the course of an Annal, the after part of that Annal is referred to by its pagination. Hence, the page-reference often applies only to a small remnant of an Annal over the page. Thus "p238" refers only to three lines on the top. Any figure referring to a whole page is followed by one of the five letters t, h, m, l, b = top, high, middle, low, bottom.

Where the modern equivalent is in Roman type, it indicates physical affinity to the head-word.

Where a modern word is put in brackets, thus [drench], it signifies that it is physically related to the head-word, but not its equivalent in meaning.
